

The Guardian

Bd.: 2.

London 1767

Augsburg, Staats- und Stadtbibliothek -- S 592 -2 urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb11278188-7

S

592

-2-

J. Hayman inv. & del.

C. Grignion Sculp.

THE GUARDIAN.

VOLUME the SECOND.

L O N D O N:

Printed for J. and R. TONSON, in the S T R A N D.

M D C C L X V I I.

TO

Mr. PULTENEY.

SIR,

THE greatest honour of human life, is to live well with men of merit; and I hope you will pardon me the vanity of publishing, by this means, my happiness in being able to name you among my friends. The conversation of a gentleman, that has

VOL. II.

A

a

DEDICATION.

a refined taste of letters, and a disposition in which those letters found nothing to correct, but very much to exert, is a good fortune too uncommon to be enjoyed in silence: In others, the greatest business of learning is to weed the soil; in you, it had nothing else to do, but to bring forth fruit. Affability, complacency, and generosity of heart, which are natural to you, wanted nothing from literature, but to refine and direct the application of them. After I have boasted I had some share in your familiarity, I know not how to do you the justice of celebrating you for the choice of an elegant, and worthy acquaintance, with whom you live in the happy communication of generous sentiments, which contribute, not only to your own mutual entertainment and improvement, but to the honour and service of your country. Zeal for the publick

DEDICATION.

publick good is the characteristick of a man of honour, and a gentleman, and must take place of pleasures, profits, and all other private gratifications. Whoever wants this motive, is an open enemy, or an inglorious neuter to mankind, in proportion to the misapplied advantages with which nature and fortune have blessed him. But you have a soul animated with nobler views, and know that the distinction of wealth and plenteous circumstances, is a tax upon an honest mind, to endeavour, as much as the occurrences of life will give him leave, to guard the properties of others, and be vigilant for the good of his fellow-subjects.

This generous inclination, no man possesses in a warmer degree than yourself; which, that heaven would reward with long possession of that reputation into which you have made

DEDICATION.

so early an entrance, the reputation of a man of sense, a good citizen, and agreeable companion, a disinterested friend, and an unbiaſſed patriot, is the hearty prayer of,

S I R,

your most obliged and most obedient,

humble ſervant,

The GUARDIAN.

THE
GUARDIAN.

N^o 83 Tuesday, June 16, 1713.

*Nimirum insanus paucis videatur, eò quòd
Maxima pars hominum morbo jactatur eodem.*

Hor. Sat. 3. l. 2. v. 120.

—Few think these mad, for most, like these,
Are sick and troubled with the same disease.

CREECH.

THERE is a restless endeavour in the mind of man after happiness. This appetite is wrought into the original frame of our nature, and exerts itself in all parts of the creation that are endued with any degree of thought or sense. But as the human mind is dignified by a more comprehensive faculty than can be found in the inferior animals, it is natural for men not only to have an eye, each to his own happiness, but also to endeavour to promote that of others in the same rank of being: and in proportion to the generosity that is ingredient in the temper of the soul, the object of its benevolence is of a larger and narrower extent. There is hardly a spirit upon earth so mean and contracted, as to centre all regards on its own interest, exclusive of the rest of mankind. Even the selfish man has some share of love, which he bestows on his family and his friends. A nobler mind hath at heart the common interest of the society or country of which he makes a part. And there is still a more diffusive spirit, whose being or intentions reach the whole mass of mankind, and are continued beyond the present age, to a succession of future generations.

The advantage arising to him who hath a tincture of this generosity on his soul, is, that he is affected with a sublimer joy than can be comprehended by one who is destitute of that noble relish. The happiness of the rest of mankind hath a natural connection with that of a reasonable mind. And in proportion, as the actions of each individual contribute to this end, he must be thought to deserve well or ill both of the world and of himself. I have in a late paper, observed, that men who have no reach of thought do oft misplace their affections on the means, without respect to the end, and by a preposterous desire of things in themselves indifferent, forego the enjoyment of that happiness which those things are instrumental to obtain. This observation has been considered with regard to criticks and misers; I shall now apply it to Free-thinkers.

Liberty and truth are the main points which these gentlemen pretend to have in view; to proceed therefore methodically, I will endeavour to shew in the first place that liberty and truth are not in themselves desirable, but only as they relate to a farther end. And secondly, that the sort of liberty and truth (allowing them those names) which our Free-thinkers use all their industry to promote, is destructive to that end, viz. human happiness: And consequently that species, as such, instead of being encouraged or esteemed, merit the detestation and abhorrence of all honest men. And in the last place, I design to shew, that under the pretence of advancing liberty and truth, they do in reality promote the two contrary evils.

As to the first point, it has been observed that it is the duty of each particular person to aim at the happiness of his fellow-creatures; and that as this view is is of a wider or narrower extent, it argues a mind more or less virtuous. Hence it follows, that a liberty of doing good actions which conduce to the felicity of mankind, and a knowledge of such truths as might either give us pleasure in the contemplation of them, or direct our conduct to the great ends of life, are valuable perfections. But shall a good man, therefore, prefer a liberty to commit murder or adultery, before the wholesome restraint of divine and human laws? Or shall a wise man prefer the knowledge of a troublesome and afflicting truth, before a pleasant error that would cheer his soul with joy and comfort, and be attended with no ill consequences? Surely no man of common sense would thank him, who had put it in his power to execute the sudden suggestions of a fit of passion or madness, or imagine himself obliged to a person, who by forwardly informing him of ill news, had caused his soul to anticipate that sorrow which she would never have felt, so long as the ungrateful truth lay concealed.

Let us then respect the happiness of our species, and in this light examine the proceedings of the Free-thinkers. From what giants and monsters would these knight-errants undertake to free the world? From the ties that religion imposeth on our minds, from the expectation of a future judgment, and from the terrors of a troubled conscience, not by reforming men's lives, and by giving encouragement to their vices. What are those important truths of which they would convince mankind? That there is no such thing as a wise and just providence; that the mind of man is corporeal; that religion is a state-trick, contrived to make men honest and virtuous, and to procure a subsistence to others for teaching and exhorting them to be so; that the good tidings of life and immortality brought to light by the gospel, are fables and impostures: From believing that we are made in the image of God, they would degrade us to an opinion that we are on a level with the beasts that perish. What pleasure or what advantage do these notions bring to mankind? Is it of any use to the publick that good men should lose the comfortable prospect of a reward to their virtue, or the wicked be encouraged to persist in their impiety, from an assurance that they shall not be punished for it hereafter.

Allowing, therefore, these men to be patrons of liberty and truth, yet it is of such truths and that sort of liberty which makes them justly be looked upon as enemies to the peace and happiness of the world. But upon a thorough and impartial view it will be found that their endeavours, instead of advancing the cause of liberty and truth, tend only to introduce slavery and error among men. There are two parts in our nature, the baser, which consists of our senses and passions, and the more noble and rational, which is properly the human part, the other being common to us with brutes. The inferior part is generally much stronger, and has always the start of reason, which if in the perpetual struggle between them, it were not aided from heaven by religion, would almost universally be vanquished, and man become a slave to his passions, which as it is the most grievous and shameful slavery, so it is the genuine result of that liberty which is proposed by overturning religion. Nor is the other part of their design better executed. Look into their pretended truths; are they not so many wretched absurdities, maintained in opposition to the light of nature and divine revelation by sly innuendos and cold jests, by such pitiful sophisms and such confused and indigested notions, that one would vehemently suspect those men usurped the name of Free-thinkers, with the same view that hypocrites do that of godliness, that it may serve for a cloke to cover the contrary defect?

I shall close this discourse with a parallel reflection on these three species, who seem to be allied by a certain agreement in mediocrity of understanding. A critick is entirely given up to the pursuit of learning; when he has got it, is his judgment clearer, his imagination livelier, or his manners more polite than those of other men? Is it observed that a miser, when he has acquired his superfluous estate, eats, drinks, or sleeps with more satisfaction, that he has a chearfuller mind, or relishes any of the enjoyments of life better than his neighbours? The Free-thinkers plead hard for a licence to think freely; they have it: But what use do they make make of it? Are they eminent for any sublime discoveries in any of the arts and sciences? have they been authors of any inventions that conduce to the well-being of mankind? Do their writings show a greater depth of design, a clearer method, or more just and correct reasoning than those of other men?

There is a great resemblance in their genius, but the critick and miser are only ridiculous and contemptible creatures, while the Free-thinker is also a pernicious one.

N^o 84 Wednesday, June 17.

Non missura cutem nisi plena cruoris hirudo.

Hor. Ars Poet. v. ult.

Sticking like leaches, till they burst with blood.

ROSCOMMON.

To the honourable NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq;

S I R,

Middle-Temple, June 12.

Presuming you may sometimes condescend to take cognizance of small enormities, I here lay one before you, which I proceed to without farther apology, as well knowing the best compliment to a man of business is to come to the point.

There is a silly habit among many of our minor-orators, who display their eloquence in the several coffee-houses of this fair city, to the no small annoyance of considerable numbers of her Majesty's spruce and loving subjects, and that is a humour they have got of twisting off your buttons. These ingenious gentlemen are not able to advance three words until they have got fast hold of one of your buttons; but as soon as they have procured such an excellent handle for discourse, they will indeed proceed with great elocution. I know not how well some may have escaped, but for my part I have often met with them to my cost; having I believe within these three years last past been argued out of several dozens; insomuch that I have for some time ordered my taylor to bring me home with every suit a dozen at least of spare ones, to supply the place of such as from time to time are detatched as an help to discourse, by the vehement gentlemen before mentioned. This way of holding a man in discourse is much practised in the coffee-houses within the city, and does not indeed so much prevail at the politer end of the town. It is likewise more frequently made use of among the small politicians, than any other body of men; I am therefore something cautious of entering into a controversy with this species of statesmen, especially the younger fry; for if you offer in the least to dissent from any thing that one of these advances, he immediately steps up to you, takes hold of one of your buttons, and indeed will soon convince you of the strength of his argumentation.

I remember upon the news of Dunkirk's being delivered into our hands, a brisk little fellow, a politician and an able engineer, had got into the middle of Batson's coffee-house, and was fortifying Gravel-ling for the service of the most christian king, with all imaginable expedition. The work was carried on with such success, that in less than a quarter of an hour's time, he had made it almost impregnable, and, in the opinion of several worthy citizens who had gathered round him, full as strong both by sea and land as Dunkirk ever could pretend to be. I happened however unadvisedly to attack some of his out-works; upon which, to show his great skill likewise in the offensive part, he immediately made an assault upon one of my buttons, and carried it in less than two minutes, notwithstanding I made as handsome a defence as was possible. He had likewise invested a second, and would certainly have been master of that too in a very little time, had he not been diverted from this enterprize by the arrival of a courier, who brought advice that his presence was absolutely necessary in the disposal of a beaver; upon which he raised the siege, and indeed retired with some precipitation. In the coffee-houses here about the Temple, you

‘ you may harangue even among our dabblers in poli-‘ ticks for about two buttons a day, and many times for ‘ less. I had yesterday the good fortune to receive ‘ very considerable additions to my knowledge in state ‘ affairs, and I find this morning, that it has not stood
‘ me in above a button. In most of the eminent coffee-
‘ houses at the other end of the town, for example, ‘ to go no farther than Will’s in Covent-Garden, the ‘ company is so refined, that you may hear and be ‘ heard, and not be a button the worse for it. Besides ‘ the gentleman before-mentioned, there are others who ‘ are no less active in their harangues, but with gentle ‘ services rather than robberies. These while they are ‘ improving your understanding, are at the same time ‘ setting off your person; they will new-plait and ad‘ just your neckcloth.

‘ But though I can bear with this kind of orator, who ‘ is so humble as to aim at the good-will of his hearer
‘ by being his valet de chambre, I must rebel against ‘ another sort of them. There are some, Sir, that do ‘ not stick to take a man by the collar when they have ‘ a mind to persuade him. It is your business, I hum‘ bly presume, Mr. Ironside, to interpose, that a man is ‘ not brought over to his opponent by force of arms.
‘ It were requisite therefore that you should name a cer‘ tain interval, which ought to be preserved between ‘ the speaker and him to whom he speaks. For sure
‘ no man has a right, because I am not of his opi‘ nion, to take any of my clothes from me, or dress me ‘ according to his own liking. I assure you the most ‘ becoming thing to me in the world is in a campaign
‘ periwig to wear one side before and the other cast ‘ upon the collateral shoulder. But there is a friend of ‘ mine who never talks to me but he throws that which ‘ I wear forward upon my shoulder, so that in restoring
‘ it to its place I lose two or three hairs out of the lock ‘ upon my buttons; though I never touched him in my ‘ whole life, and have been acquainted with him this ‘ ten year. I have seen my eager friend in danger
‘ sometimes of a quarrel by this ill custom, for there ‘ are more young gentlemen who can feel than can ‘ understand. It would be therefore a good office to ‘ my

‘ my friend if you advised him not to collar any ‘ man but one who knows what he means, and give ‘ it him as a standing PRECAUTION in conversation, ‘ that none but a very good friend will give him the ‘ liberty of being seen, felt, heard, and understood all ‘ at once.’

I am, S I R,

your most humble servant,

JOHANNES MISOCHIROSOPIUS.

P. S. ‘ I have a sister who saves herself from being ‘ handled by one of these manual rhetoricians by giving ‘ him her fan to play with ; but I appeal to you in the ‘ behalf of us poor helpless men.’

June 15, 1713.

I Am of opinion, that no orator or speaker in public or private has any right to meddle with any body’s clothes but his own. I indulge men in the liberty of playing with their own hats, fumbling in their own pockets, fettling their own periwigs, tossing or twisting their heads, and all other gesticulations which may contribute to their elocution, but pronounce it an infringement of the English liberty for a man to keep his neighbour’s person in custody in order to force an hearing ; and farther declare, that all assent given by an auditor, under such constraint, is of itself void and of no effect.

NESTOR IRONSIDE.

Thursday,

N^o 85

Thursday, June 18.

— Sed te decor iste, quod obtasEsse vetat, votoque tuo tua forma repugnat.

Ovid. Met. l. i. v. 488.

But so much youth, with so much beauty join'd
Oppose the state, which thy desires design'd.

DRYDEN.

TO suffer scandal (says somebody) is the tax which every person of merit pays to the publick; and my lord Verulam finely observes, that a man who has no virtue in himself, ever envies virtue in others. I know not how it comes to pass, but detraction, through all ages, has been found a vice which the fair sex too easily give into. Not the Roman satyrist could use them with more severity than they themselves do one another. Some audacious criticks, in my opinion, have lanced out a little too far when they take upon them to prove, in opposition to history, that Lais was a woman of as much virtue as beauty, which violently displeasing the Phrynes of those times, they secretly prevailed with the historians to deliver her down to posterity under the infamous character of an extorting prostitute. But though I have the greatest regard imaginable to that softer species, yet am I sorry to find they have very little for themselves. So far are they from being tender of one another's reputation, that they take a malicious pleasure in destroying it. My lady the other day, when Jack was asking who could be so base to spread such a report about Mrs.—answered, None, you may be sure, but a woman. A little after, Dick told my lady, that he had heard Florella hint as if Cleora wore artificial teeth. The reason is, said she, because Cleora first gave out, that Florella owed her complexion to a wash. Thus the industrious pretty creatures take pains by invention, to throw blemishes on each other, when they do not consider that there is a profligate set of fellows too ready to taint the character of the virtuous, or blast the charms
of

of the blooming virgin. The young lady, from whom I had the honour of receiving the following letter, deserves, or rather claims, protection from our sex, since so barbarously treated by her own. Certainly they ought to defend innocence from injury, who gave ignorantly the occasion of its being assaulted. Had the men been less liberal of their applauses, the women had been more sparing of these calumnious censures.

To the GUARDIAN.

SIR,

‘ I Do not know at what nice point you fix the bloom
‘ of a young lady ; but I am one who can just look ‘ back upon fifteen. My father dying three years ago,
‘ left me under the care and direction of my mother,
‘ with a fortune not profusely great, yet such as might ‘ demand a very handsome settlement, if ever proposals
‘ of marriage should be offered. My mother, after the ‘ usual time of retired mourning was over, was so affectionately indulgent to me, as to take me along with ‘ her in all her visits ; but still not thinking she gratified
‘ my youth enough, permitted me further to go with ‘ my relations to all the publick, chearful, but innocent ‘ entertainments, where she was too reserved to appear ‘ herself. The two first years of my teens were easy, ‘ gay and delightful. Every one caressed me ; the old ‘ ladies told me how finely I grew, and the young ones
‘ were proud of my company. But when the third ‘ year had a little advanced, my relations used to tell
‘ my mother that pretty Miss Clary was shot up into a ‘ woman. The gentlemen begun now not to let their ‘ eyes glance over me, and in most places I found myself distinguished ; but observed, the more I grew into ‘ the esteem of their sex, the more I lost the favour of ‘ my own. Some of those whom I had been familiar ‘ with, grew cold and indifferent : others mistook, by ‘ design, my meaning, made me speak what I never ‘ thought, and so by degrees took occasion to break off
‘ all acquaintance. There were several little insignificant
‘ reflections cast upon me, as being a lady of a great ‘ many quaintnesses, and such like, which I seemed not
to

to take notice of. But my mother coming home about a week ago, told me there was a scandal spread about town by my enemies, that would at once ruin me for ever for a beauty: I earnestly entreated her to know it; she refused me, but yesterday it discovered itself. Being in an assembly of Gentlemen and Ladies, one of the gentlemen who had been very facetious to several of the Ladies, at last turning to me, And as for you, Madam, Prior has already given us your character.

That air and harmony of shape expresses,
Fine by degrees, yet beautifully less.

I perceived immediately a malignant smile display itself in the countenance of some of the Ladies, which they seconded with a scornful flutter of the fan; until one of them, unable any longer to contain, asked the Gentleman if he did not remember what Congreve said about Aurelia, for she thought it mighty pretty. He made no answer, but instantly repeated the verses.

The Mulcibers who in the Minories sweat,
And massive bars on stubborn anvils beat;
Deform'd themselves, yet forge those stays of steel,
Which arm Aurelia with a shape to kill.

This was no sooner over, but it was easily discernible what an ill-natured satisfaction most of the company took; and the more pleasure they showed by dwelling upon the two last lines, the more they increased my trouble and confusion. And now, Sir, after this tedious account, what would you advise me to? Is there no way to be cleared of these malicious calumnies? What is beauty worth, that makes the possessor thus unhappy? Why was nature so lavish of her gifts to me, as to make her kindness prove a cruelty? They tell me my shape is delicate, my eyes sparkling, my lips I know not what, my cheeks, forsooth, adorned with a just mixture of the rose and lily; but I wish this face was barely not disagreeable, this voice harsh and unharmonious, these limbs only not deformed, and then perhaps I might live easy and unmolested, and neither raise love and admiration in the men, nor scandal and hatred in the women.
and

your very humble servant,

CLARINA.

The best answer I can make my fair correspondent, is, That she ought to comfort herself with this consideration, that those who talk thus of her know it is false, but wish they could make others believe it true. It is not they think you deformed, but are vexed that they themselves were not as nicely framed. If you will take an old man's advice, laugh, and be not concerned at them: They have attained what they endeavoured if they make you uneasy; for it is envy, that has made them so. I would not have you wish your shape one sixtieth part of an inch disproportioned, nor desire your face might be impoverished with the ruin of half a feature, though numbers of remaining beauties might make the loss insensible; but take courage, go into the brightest assemblies, and the world will quickly confess it to be scandal. Thus Plato, hearing it was asserted by some persons that he was a very bad man, "I shall take care," said he, "to live so, that no body will believe them."

I shall conclude this paper with a relation of matter of fact. A gay young gentleman in the country, not many years ago, fell desperately in love with a blooming fine creature, whom give me leave to call Melissa. After a pretty long delay, and frequent solicitations, she refused several others of larger estates, and consented to make him happy. But they had not been married much above a twelvemonth, until it appeared too true what Juba says,

Beauty soon grows familiar to the lover,
Fades in the eye, and palls upon the sense.

Polydore (for that was his name) finding himself grow every day more uneasy, and unwilling she should discover the cause, for diversion came up to town, and to avoid all suspicions, brought Melissa along with him. After some stay here, Polydore was one day informed, that a set of Ladies over their tea-table, in the circle of scandal, had touched upon Melissa——And was that the silly thing so much talked of? How did she ever grow into a toast? For their parts they had eyes, as well as the men, but could not discover where her beauties lay. Polydore upon hearing this, flew immediately home, and told Melissa, with the utmost transport, that he was now fully convinced how numberless were her charms, since her own sex would not allow her any.
that

Mr. IRONSIDE,

Button's Coffee-house.

‘ I Have observed that this day you make mention
‘ of Will’s Coffee-house, as a place where people
‘ are too polite to hold a man in discourse by the button.
‘ Every body knows your honour frequents this house;
‘ therefore they will take an advantage against me, and ‘ say, if my company was as civil as that at Will’s,
‘ you would do so: Therefore pray your honour do ‘ not be afraid of doing me justice, because people ‘ would think it may be a conceit below you on this ‘ occasion to name the name of your humble servant,

DANIEL BUTTON.

‘ The young poets are in the back room, and take ‘ their places as you directed.’

Friday,

N^o 86

Friday, June 19.

—Cui mens di-vinior, atque osMagna sonaturum—

Hor. Sat. 4. l. 1. v. 43.

—————— who writes

With fancy high, and bold and daring flights.

CREECH.

TO NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq;

S I R,

Oxford, June 16, 1713.

THE classical writers, according to your advice, are by no means neglected by me, while I pursue my studies in divinity. I am persuaded that they are fountains of good sense and eloquence; and that it is absolutely necessary for a young mind to form itself upon such models. For by a careful study of their stile and manner, we shall at least avoid those faults, into which a youthful imagination is apt to hurry us; such as luxuriance of fancy, licentiousness of stile, redundancy of thought, and false ornaments. As I have been flattered by my friends, that I have some genius for poetry, I sometimes turn my thoughts that way; and with pleasure reflect, that I have got over that childish part of life, which delights in points and turns of wit; and that I can take a manly and rational satisfaction in that which is called painting in poetry. Whether it be, that in these copyings of nature, the object is placed in such lights and circumstances as strike the fancy agreeably; or whether we are surpris'd to find objects, that are absent, placed before our eyes; or whether it be our admiration of the author's art and dexterity; or whether we amuse ourselves with comparing the picture and the original; or rather (which is most probable) because all these reasons concur to affect us, we are wonderfully charmed with these drawings after the life, this magick that raises apparitions in the fancy.

Land.

‘ Landfhips, or ftill life, work much lefs upon us,
‘ than representations of the poftures or paffions of liv‘ ing creatures. Again, thofe paffions or poftures ftrike
‘ us more or lefs in proportion to the eafe or violence
‘ of their motions. An horfe grazing moves us lefs than ‘ one ftretching in a race, and a racer lefs than one in ‘ the fury of a battle. It is very difficult, I believe, to ‘ exprefs violent motions, which are fleeting and tran‘ fitory, either in colours or words. In poetry it re‘ quires great fpirit in thought, and energy in ftile;
‘ which we find more of in the Eastern poetry, than in ‘ either the Greek or Roman. The great Creator, ‘ who accommodated himfelf to thofe he vouchsafed to ‘ fpeak to, hath put into the mouths of his prophets ‘ fuch fublime fentiments and exalted language, as muft
‘ abafh the pride and wit of man. In the book of Job,
‘ the moft ancient poem in the world, we have fuch ‘ paintings and descriptions, as I have fpoken of, in ‘ great variety. I fhall at prefent make fome remarks ‘ on the celebrated description of the horfe in that holy ‘ book, and compare it with thofe drawn by Homer
‘ and Virgil.

‘ Homer hath the following fimilitude of an horfe ‘ twice over in the Iliad, which Virgil hath copied from ‘ him; at leaft he hath deviated lefs from Homer, than ‘ Mr. Dryden hath from him.

Freed from his keepers, thus with broken reins,
The wanton courfer prances o’er the plains;
Or in the pride of youth o’erleaps the mounds,
And snuffs the females in forbidden grounds;
Or seeks his wat’ring in the well-known flood,
To quench his thirst, and cool his fiery blood:
He swims luxuriant in the liquid plain,
And o’er his shoulders flows his waving mane;
He neighs, he snorts, he bears his head on high,
Before his ample chest the frothy waters fly.

‘ Virgil’s description is much fuller than the foregoing,
‘ which, as I faid, is only a fimile; whereas Virgil pro‘ fesses to treat of the nature of the horfe. It is thus ‘ admirably tranflated.

The

The fiery courser, when he hears from far
 The sprightly trumpets, and the shouts of war,
 Pricks up his ears, and trembling with delight,
 Shifts pace, and paws; and hopes the promis'd fight.
 On his right shoulder his thick mane reclin'd,
 Ruffles at speed, and dances in the wind.
 His horny hoofs are jetty black, and round;
 His chin is double; starting, with a bound
 He turns the turf, and shakes the solid ground.
 Fire from his eyes, clouds from his nostrils flow;
 He bears his rider headlong on the foe.

‘ Now follows that in the book of Job; which under all the disadvantages of having been written in a language little understood; of being expressed in phrases peculiar to a part of the world, whose manner of thinking and speaking seems to us very uncouth; and above all, of appearing in a prose translation; is nevertheless so transcendently above the heathen descriptions, that hereby we may perceive how faint and languid the images are which are formed by mortal authors, when compared with that, which is figured, as it were, just as it appears in the eye of the Creator. God speaking to Job, asks him,

“ Hast thou given the horse strength? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder? Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? the glory of his nostrils is terrible. He paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in his strength: He goeth on to meet the armed men. He mocketh at fear, and is not afrighted; neither turneth he back from the sword. The quiver rattleth against him, the glittering spear and the shield. He swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage; neither believeth he that it is the sound of the trumpet. He saith amongst the trumpets, Ha, ha; and he smelleth the battle afar off; the thunder of the captains, and the shouting.”

‘ Here are all the great and sprightly images, that thought can form, of this generous beast, expressed in such force and vigour of stile, as would have given the great wits of antiquity new laws for the sublime, had they been acquainted with these writings.

‘ I cannot

“ I cannot but particularly observe, that whereas the “ classical poets chiefly endeavour to paint the outward “ figure, lineaments, and motions; the sacred poet “ makes all the beauties to flow from an inward principle
 “ in the creature he describes, and thereby gives great “ spirit and vivacity to his description. The following “ phrases and circumstances seem singularly remarkable.

“ Hast thou cloathed his neck with thunder?” Homer “ and Virgil mention nothing about the neck of the “ horse, but his mane. The sacred author, by the bold “ figure of thunder, not only expresses the shaking of “ that remarkable beauty in the horse, and the flakes
 “ of hair which naturally suggest the idea of lightning;
 “ but likewise the violent agitation and force of the “ neck, which in the oriental tongues had been flatly “ exprest by a metaphor less than this.

“ Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper?”
 “ There is a twofold beauty in this expression, which “ not only marks the courage of this beast, by asking if “ he can be scared? but likewise raises a noble image “ of his swiftness, by insinuating, that if he could be “ frightened, he would bound away with the nimbleness
 “ of a grasshopper.

“ The glory of his nostrils is terrible.” This is more “ strong and concise than that of Virgil, which yet is “ the noblest line that was ever written without inspi“ ration.

Collectumque premens volvit sub naribus ignem.

Georg. 3. v. 85.

And in his nostrils rolls collected fire.

“ He rejoiceth in his strength—He mocketh at fear “ —neither believeth he that it is the sound of the “ trumpet—He saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha;”—
 “ are signs of courage, as I said before, flowing from “ an inward principle. There is a peculiar beauty in his “ not believing it is the sound of the trumpet:” that is,
 “ he cannot believe it for joy; but when he was sure of “ it, and is “ amongst the trumpets, he saith, Ha, ha;”
 “ he neighs, he rejoices. His docility is elegantly painted “ in his being unmoved at the “ rattling quiver, the “ glittering

“glittering spear and the shield;” and is well imitated
 ‘ by Oppian (who undoubtedly read Job as well as ‘ Virgil) in his poem upon hunting.

How firm the manag’d war-horse keeps his ground,
 Nor breaks his order, tho’ the trumpets sound !
 With fearless eye the glitt’ring host surveys,
 And glares directly at the helmet’s blaze :
 The master’s word, the laws of war he knows,
 And when to stop, and when to charge the foes.

“He swalloweth the ground” is an expression for ‘ prodigious swiftness, in use among the Arabians, Job’s ‘ countrymen, at this day. The Latins have something ‘ like it.

Latumque fugâ consumere campum. Nemefian.
 In flight the extended champain to consume.

Carpere prata fugâ. Virg. Georg. 3. 142.
 In flight to crop the meads.

———campumque volatu
Cùm rapuere, pedum vestigia quæras. Sil. Ital.
 When in their flight the champain they have snatch’d,
 No track is left behind.

‘ It is indeed the boldest and noblest of images for swift‘ ness; nor have I met with any thing that comes so ‘ near it, as Mr. Pope’s in Windsor Forest.

The impatient courser pants in ev’ry vein,
 And pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
 Hills, vales and floods appear already crost,
 And ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.

“He smelleth the battle afar off,” and what follows ‘ about the shouting, is a circumstance expressed with ‘ great spirit by Lucan.

So when the ring with joyful shouts rebounds,
 With rage and pride the imprison’d courser bounds :

He frets, he foams, he rends his idle rein;
Springs o'er the fence, and headlong seeks the plain.

I am, S I R,

your ever obliged servant.

JOHN LIZARD.

N^o 87 Saturday, June 20.

——— Constiterant hinc Thisbe, Priamus illinc, Inque vicem fuerat captatus anhelitus oris.

Ovid. Met. l. 4. v. 71.

Here Pyramus, there gentle Thisbe, strove
To catch each other's breath, the balmy breeze of love.

MY PRECAUTIONS are made up of all that I can hear and see, translate, borrow, paraphrase, or contract, from the persons with whom I mingle and converse, and the authors whom I read. But the grave discourses which I sometimes give the town, do not win so much attention as lighter matters. For this reason it is, that I am obliged to consider vice as it is ridiculous, and accompanied with gallantry, else I find in a very short time I shall lie like waste paper on the tables of coffee-houses. Where I have taken most pains I often find myself least read. There is a spirit of intrigue got into all, even the meanest of the people, and the very servants are bent upon delights, and commence oglers and languishers. I happened the other day to pass by a gentleman's house, and saw the most flippant scene of low love that I have ever observed. The maid was rubbing the windows within side of the house, and her humble servant the footman was so happy a man as to be employed in cleaning the same glass on the side toward the street. The wench began with the greatest severity of aspect imaginable, and breathing on the glass, followed it with a dry cloth; her opposite observed her, and fetching a deep sigh, as if it were his last, with a very disconsolate air did the same on his side of the window. He still worked on and languished, until at last his fair one smiled, but covered herself, and spreading the napkin in her hand, concealed herself from her admirer, while he took pains, as it were, to work through all that intercepted their meeting. This pretty contest held for four or five large panes of glass, until at last the waggery was turned into an humorous way of breathing in each other's faces, and catching the impression. The gay creatures were thus loving and pleasing their imaginations with their nearness and distance, until the windows were so transparent that the beauty of the female made the man-servant impatient of beholding it, and the whole house besides being abroad, he ran in, and they romped out of my sight. It may be imagined these Oglers of no quality, made a more sudden application of the intention of kind sighs and glances, than those whose education lays them under greater restraints, and who are consequently more slow in their advances. I have often observed all the low part of the town in love, and taking a hackney-coach have considered all that passed by me in that light, as these cities are composed of crouds wherein there is not one who is not lawfully or unlawfully engaged in that passion. When one is in this speculation, it is not unpleasant to observe alliances between those males and females whose lot it is to act in publick. Thus the woods in the middle of summer, are not more entertaining with the different notes of birds, than the town is of different voices of the several sorts of people who act in publick; they are divided into classes, and crouds made for crouds. The hackney-coachmen, chairmen, and porters, are the lovers of the hawker-women, fruitresses, and milk-maids. They are a wild world of themselves, and have voices significant of their private inclinations, which strangers can take no notice of. Thus a wench with fruit looks like a mad-woman when she cries wares you see she does not carry, but those in the secret know that cry is only an assignation to an hackney-coachman who is driving by, and understands her. The whole people is in an intrigue, and the the undiscerning passengers are unacquainted with the meaning of what they hear all round them: They know not how to separate the cries of mercenary traders, from the sighs and lamentations of languishing lovers. The common face of modesty is lost among the ordinary part of the world, and the general corruption of manners is visible from the loss of all deference in the low people towards those of condition. One order of mankind trips fast after the next above it, and by this rule you may trace iniquity from the conversations of the most wealthy to those of the humblest degree. It is an act of great resolution to pass by a croud of polite footmen, who can rally, make love, ridicule, and observe upon all the passengers who are obliged to go by the places where they wait. This licence makes different characters among them, and there are beaux, partymen and freethinkers in livery. I take it for a rule, that there is no bad man but makes a bad woman, and the contagion of vice is what should make people cautious of their behaviour. Juvenal says "there is the greatest reverence to be had to the presence of children;" it may be as well said of the presence of servants, and it would be some kind of virtue if we kept our vices to ourselves. It is a feeble authority which has not the support of personal respect, and the dependence founded only upon their receiving their maintenance of us, is not of force enough to support us against an habitual behaviour, for which they condemn and deride us. No man can be well served, but by those who have an opinion of his merit; and that opinion cannot be kept up, but by an exemption from those faults which we would restrain in our dependents.
and

Though our fopperies imitated are subjects of laughter, our vices transferred to our servants give matter of lamentation. But there is nothing in which our families are so docile, as in the imitation of our delights. It is therefore but common prudence to take care that our inferiors know of none but our innocent ones. It is, methinks, a very arrogant thing to expect that the single consideration of not offending us should curb our servants from vice, when much higher motives cannot moderate our own inclinations. But I began this paper with an observation that the lower world is got into fashionable vices, and above all to the understanding the language of the eye. There is nothing but writing songs which the footmen do not practise as well as their masters. Spurious races of mankind, which pine in want, and perish in their first months of being, come into the world from this degeneracy. The possession of wealth and affluence seems to carry some faint extenuation of his guilt who is sunk by it into luxury; but poverty and servitude accompanied with the vices of wealth and licentiousness, is, I believe, a circumstance of ill peculiar to our age. This may, perhaps, be matter of jest, or is overlooked by those who do not turn their thoughts upon the actions of others. But from that one particular, of the immorality of our servants arising from the negligence of masters of families in their care of them, flows that irresistible torrent of disasters which spreads itself through all human life. Old age oppressed with beggary, youth drawn into the commission of murders and robberies, both owe their disaster to this evil. If we consider the happiness which grows out of a fatherly conduct towards servants, it would encourage a man to that sort of care, as much as the effects of a libertine behaviour to them would affright us.

Lycurgus is a man of that noble disposition, that his domesticks, in a nation of the greatest liberty, enjoy a freedom known only to themselves, who live under his roof. He is the banker, the council, the parent of all his numerous dependents. Kindness is the law of his house, and the way to his favour is being gentle and well-natured to their fellow-servants. Every one recommends himself, by appearing officious to let their patron know the merit of others under his care. Many little fortunes have streamed out of his favour; and his prudence is such, that the fountain is not exhausted by the channels from it, but its way cleared to run new meanders. He bestows with so much judgement, that his bounty is the increase of his wealth; all who share his favour, are enabled to enjoy it by his example, and he has not only made, but qualified many a man to be rich.

Monday,

N^o 88 Monday, June 22.

Mens agitat molem——

Virg. Æn. 6. v. 727.

A mind informs the mass.

TO one who regards things with a philosophical eye, and hath a soul capable of being delighted with the sense that truth and knowledge prevail among men, it must be a grateful reflection to think that the sublimest truths, which among the heathens only here and there one of brighter parts and more leisure than ordinary could attain to, are now grown familiar to the meanest inhabitants of these nations.

Whence came this surprizing change, that regions formerly inhabited by ignorant and savage people, should now outshine ancient Greece, and the other eastern countries, so renowned of old, in the most elevated notions of theology and morality? Is it the effect of our own parts and industry? Have our common mechanicks more refined understandings than the ancient philosophers? It is owing to the God of Truth, who came down from heaven, and condescended to be himself our teacher. It is as we are Christians, that we profess more excellent and divine truths than the rest of mankind.

If there be any of the Free-thinkers who are not direct atheists, charity would incline one to believe them ignorant of what is here advanced. And it is for their information that I write this paper, the design of which is to compare the ideas that Christians entertain of the being and attributes of a God, with the gross notions of the Heathen-World. Is it possible for the mind of man to conceive a more august idea of the Deity than is set forth in the holy Scriptures? I shall throw together some passages relating to this subject, which I propose only as philosophical sentiments, to be considered by a Free-thinker.

‘ Though there be that are called Gods, yet to us there ‘ is but one God. He made the heaven, and heaven of ‘ heavens, with all their host; the earth and all things ‘ that are therein; the seas and all that is therein; He ‘ said, let them be, and it was so. He hath stretched ‘ forth the heavens. He hath founded the earth, and ‘ hung it upon nothing. He hath shut up the sea with ‘ doors, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come and no ‘ farther, and here shall thy proud waves be staid. The ‘ Lord is an invisable spirit, in whom we live, and move,
‘ and have our being. He is the fountain of life. He ‘ preserveth man and beast. He giveth food to all flesh.
‘ In his hand is the soul of every living thing, and the ‘ breath of all mankind. The Lord maketh poor and ‘ maketh rich. He bringeth low and lifteth up. He kil‘ leth and maketh alive. He woundeth and he healeth.
‘ By him kings reign, and princes decree justice, and ‘ not a sparrow falleth to the ground without him. All ‘ angels, authorities and powers are subject to him. He ‘ appointeth the moon for seasons, and the sun knoweth
‘ his going down. He thundereth with his voice, and ‘ directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightning ‘ unto the ends of the earth. Fire and hail, snow and ‘ vapour, wind and storm, fulfil his word. The Lord
‘ is King for ever and ever, and his dominion is an ever‘ lasting dominion. The earth and the heavens shall ‘ perish, but thou, O Lord, remainest. They all shall wax ‘ old, as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt thou fold
‘ them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the ‘ same, and thy years shall have no end. God is perfect
‘ in knowledge; his understanding is infinite. He is the ‘ father of lights. He looketh to the ends of the earth,
‘ and seeth under the whole heaven. The Lord behold-
‘ eth all the children of men from the place of his habi‘ tation, and considereth all their works. He knoweth
‘ our down-fitting and up-rising. He compasseth our path,
‘ and counteth our steps. He is acquainted with all our ‘ ways; and when we enter our closet, and shut our ‘ door, he seeth us. He knoweth the things that come ‘ into our mind, every one of them; and no thought ‘ can be withholden from him. The Lord is good to ‘ all, and his tender mercies are over all his works. He ‘ is

‘ is a father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widow.
‘ He is the God of peace, the Father of mercies, and the ‘ God of all comfort and consolation. The Lord is great,
‘ and we know him not ; His greatness is unsearchable.
‘ Who but he hath measured the waters in the hollow of ‘ his hand, and meted out the heavens with a span ?
‘ Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and
‘ the glory, and the victory, and the majesty. Thou art ‘ very great, thou art clothed with honour. Heaven is ‘ thy throne and earth is thy footstool.’

Can the mind of a philosopher rise to a more just and magnificent, and at the same time a more amiable idea of the Deity than is here set forth in the strongest images and most emphatical language ? And yet this is the language of shepherds and fishermen. The illiterate Jews and poor persecuted Christians retained these noble sentiments, while the polite and powerful nations of the earth were given up to that sottish sort of worship, of which the following elegant description is extracted from one of the inspired writers.

‘ Who hath formed a God, and molten an image
‘ that is profitable for nothing ? The smith with the ‘ tongs both worketh in the coals and fashioneth it with ‘ hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his ‘ arms : yea he is hungry and his strength faileth. He ‘ drinketh no water and is faint. A man planteth an ‘ ash, and the rain doth nourish it. He burneth part ‘ thereof in the fire. He roseth rost. He warmeth ‘ himself. And the residue thereof he maketh a God.
‘ He falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and pray-
‘ eth unto it, and saith, Deliver me, for thou art my God.
‘ None considereth in his heart, I have burnt part of ‘ it in the fire, yea also, I have baked bread upon the ‘ coals thereof ; I have rosted flesh and eaten it ; and ‘ shall I make the residue thereof an abomination ?
‘ Shall I fall down to the stock of a tree ? ’

In such circumstances as these, for a man to declare for Free-Thinking, and disengage himself from the yoke of Idolatry, were doing honour to human nature, and a work well becoming the great asserters of reason. But in a church, where our adoration is directed to the supreme Being, and (to say the least) where is nothing either in the object or manner of worship that contradicts the light of nature ; there, under the pretence of free-thinking, to rail at the religious institutions of their country, sheweth an undistinguishing genius that mistakes opposition for freedom of thought. And, indeed, notwithstanding the pretences of some few among our Free-thinkers, I can hardly think there are men so stupid and inconsistent with themselves, as to have a serious regard for natural religion, and at the same time use their utmost endeavours to destroy the credit of those sacred writings, which as they have been the means of bringing these parts of the world to the knowledge of natural religion, so in case they lose their authority over the minds of men, we should of course sink into the same idolatry which we see practised by other unenlightened nations.

If a person who exerts himself in the modern way of free-thinking be not a stupid idolater, it is undeniable that he contributes all he can to the making other men so, either by ignorance or design; which lays him under the dilemma, I will not say of being a fool or knave, but of incurring the contempt or detestation of mankind.

N^o 89

Tuesday, June 23.

Ignæus est ollis vigor, & cœlestis origo

Seminibus———

Virg. Æn. 6. v. 730.

They boast ethereal vigour, and are form'd
From seeds of heavenly birth.

THE same faculty of reason and understanding, which placeth us above the brute part of the creation, doth also subject our minds to greater and more manifold disquiets than creatures of an inferior rank are sensible of. It is by this that we anticipate future disasters, and oft create to ourselves real pain from imaginary evils, as well as multiply the pangs arising from those which cannot be avoided.

It

It behoves us therefore to make the best use of that sublime talent, which, so long as it continues the instrument of passion, will serve only to make us more miserable, in proportion as we are more excellent than other beings.

It is the privilege of a thinking being to withdraw from the objects that solicit his senses, and turn his thoughts inward on himself. For my own part I often mitigate the pain arising from the little misfortunes and disappointments that checker human life by this introversion of my faculties, wherein I regard my own soul as the image of her Creator, and receive great consolation from beholding those perfections which testify her divine original, and lead me into some knowledge of her everlasting Archetype.

But there is not any property or circumstance of my being that I contemplate with more joy than my Immortality. I can easily overlook any present momentary sorrow, when I reflect that it is in my power to be happy a thousand years hence. If it were not for this thought, I had rather be an oyster than a man, the most stupid and senseless of animals than a reasonable mind tortured with an extreme innate desire of that perfection which it despairs to obtain.

It is with great pleasure that I behold Instinct, Reason and Faith concurring to attest this comfortable truth. It is revealed from heaven, it is discovered by philosophers, and the ignorant, unenlightened part of mankind have a natural propensity to believe it. It is an agreeable entertainment to reflect on the various shapes under which this doctrine has appeared in the world. The Pythagorean transmigration, the sensual habitations of the Mahometan, and the shady realms of Pluto, do all agree in the main points, the continuation of our existence, and the distribution of rewards and punishments, proportioned to the merits or demerits of men in this life.

But in all these schemes there is something gross and improbable, that shocks a reasonable and speculative mind. Whereas nothing can be more rational and sublime than the Christian Idea of a future state. “ Eye hath not seen, “ nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of “ man to conceive the things which God hath prepared for “ those that love him.” The above-mentioned schemes are narrow transcripts of our present state: but in this indefinite description there is something ineffably great and noble.

The mind of man must be raised to a higher pitch, not only to partake the enjoyments of the Christian Paradise, but even to be able to frame any notion of them.

Nevertheless, in order to gratify our imagination, and by way of condescension to our low way of thinking, the ideas of light, glory, a crown, &c. are made use of to adumbrate that which we cannot directly understand.

“ The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed “ them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of “ waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their “ eyes. And there shall be no more death, neither “ sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more “ pain, for the former things are passed away, and “ behold all things are new. There shall be no night “ there, and they need no candle, neither light of the “ sun: for the Lord God giveth them light, and shall “ make them drink of the river of his pleasures; and “ they shall reign for ever and ever. They shall re“ ceive a crown of glory which fadeth not away.

These are cheering reflections; and I have often wondered that men could be found so dull and phlegma-tick, as to prefer the thought of annihilation before them; or so ill-natured, as to endeavour to persuade mankind to the disbelief of what is so pleasing and profitable even in the prospect; or so blind, as not to see that there is a Deity, and if there be, that this scheme of things flows from his attributes, and evidently corresponds with the other parts of his creation.

I know not how to account for this absurd turn of thought, except it proceed from a want of other employment joined with an affectation of singularity. I shall, therefore, inform our modern Free-thinkers of two points whereof they seem to be ignorant. The first is, that it is not the being singular, but being singular for something, that argues either extraordinary endowments of nature, or benevolent intentions to mankind, which draws the admiration and esteem of the world. A mistake in this point naturally arises from that confusion of thought

thought which I do not remember to have seen so great instances of in any writers, as in certain modern Free-thinkers.

The other point is, that there are innumerable objects within the reach of a human mind, and each of these objects may be viewed in innumerable lights and positions, and the relations arising between them are innumerable. There is, therefore, an infinity of things whereon to employ their thoughts, if not with advantage to the world, at least with amusement to themselves, and without offence or prejudice to other people. If they proceed to exert their talent of Free-thinking in this way; they may be innocently dull, and no one take any notice of it. But to see men without either wit or argument pretend to run down divine and human laws, and treat their fellow-subjects with contempt for professing a belief of those points on which the present as well as future interest of mankind depends, is not to be endured. For my own part, I shall omit no endeavours to render their persons as despicable, and their practices as odious, in the eye of the world, as they deserve.

N^o 90

Wednesday, June 24.

—Fungar vice cotis—

Hor. Ars Poet. v. 304.

I'll play the whetstone.

CREECH.

IT is, they say, frequent with authors to write letters to themselves, either out of laziness or vanity.

The following is genuine, and, I think, deserves the attention of every man of sense in England.

To the GUARDIAN.

S I R,

June 20.

THough I am not apt to make complaints, and have never yet troubled you with any, and little thought I ever should, yet seeing that in your paper of

‘ this day, you take no notice of yesterday’s Examiner,
‘ as I hoped you would; my love for my religion,
‘ which is so nearly concerned, would not permit me
‘ to be silent. The matter, Sir, is this. * A bishop of ‘ our church (to whom the Examiner himself has ‘ nothing to object, but his care and concern for the ‘ protestant religion, which by him, it seems, is thought
‘ a sufficient fault) has lately published a book, in which ‘ he endeavours to shew the folly, ignorance, and ‘ mistake of the church of Rome in its worship of ‘ saints: From this the Examiner takes occasion to fall ‘ upon the author with his utmost malice, and to make ‘ him the subject of his ridicule. Is it then become a ‘ crime for a protestant to speak or write in defence of ‘ his religion? Shall a papist have leave to print and ‘ publish in England what he pleases in defence of his ‘ own opinion, with the Examiner’s approbation; and ‘ shall not a protestant be permitted to write an answer
‘ to it? For this, Mr. Guardian, is the present case.
‘ Last year a Papist (or to please Mr. Examiner, a Ro‘ man Catholick) published the life of St. Wenefrede, ‘ for the use of those devout pilgrims who go in great ‘ numbers to offer up their prayers to her at her well.
‘ This gave occasion to the worthy prelate, in whose ‘ diocese that well is, to make some observations upon
‘ it; and in order to undeceive so many poor deluded
‘ people, to show how little reason, and how small au‘ thority there is, not only to believe any of the miracles ‘ attributed to St. Wenefrede, but even to believe there ‘ ever was such a person in the world. And shall then a ‘ good man, upon such an account, be liable to be abused
‘ in so publick a manner? Can any good Church-of-‘ England man bear to see a bishop, one whom her pre‘ sent majesty was pleased to make, treated in so ludi‘ crous a way? or shall one pass by the scurrility and ‘ the immodesty that is to be found in several parts of ‘ the paper? Who can with patience see St. Paul and St.
‘ Wenefrede set, by the Examiner, upon a level, and the ‘ authority for one made by him to be equal with that ‘ for the other? Who, that is a Christian, can endure his ‘ insipid mirth upon so serious an occasion? I must con-

* Dr. William Fleetwood, Bishop of St. Asaph.

‘ fefs it raifes my indignation to the greateft height, to ‘ fee a pen that has been long employed in writing pane‘ gyrics upon perfons of the firft rank, (who would be ‘ indeed to be pitied, were they to depend upon that
 ‘ for their praife) to fee, I fay, the fame pen at laft made ‘ ufe of in defence of popery.

‘ I think I may now, with juftice, congratulate with ‘ thofe whom the Examiner diflikes; fince, for my own ‘ part, I fhould reckon it my great honour to be worthy ‘ his dif-eftcem, and fhould count his cenfure praife.

I am, S I R,

Your moft humble fervant,

The above letter complains, with great juftice, againft this incorrigible creature; but I do not infer any thing concerning him, in hopes what I fay will have any effect upon him, but to prevent the impreffion which what he fays may have upon others. I fhall end this paper with a letter I have juft now written to a gentleman, whofe writings are often inferted in the Guardian, without deviation of one tittle from what he fends.

S I R,

June 23.

‘ I Have received the favour of your’s with the ‘ inclofed, which made up the papers of the two laft ‘ days. I cannot but look upon myfelf with great ‘ contempt and mortification, when I reflect that I have ‘ thrown away more hours than you have lived, though
 ‘ you fo much excel me in every thing for which I ‘ would live. Until I knew you, I thought it the privi‘ lege of angels only to be very knowing and very inno‘ cent. In the warmth of youth to be capable of fuch ‘ abftracted and virtuous reflections, (with a fuitable life)
 ‘ as thofe with which you entertain yourfelf, is the ‘ utmoft of human perfection and felicity. The greateft
 ‘ honour I can conceive done to another, is when an elder ‘ does reverence to a younger, though that younger is ‘ not diftinguifhed above him by fortune. Your contempt
 ‘ of pleasures, riches and honour will crown you with ‘ them all, and I wifh you them not for your own fake,
 ‘ but

• for the reason which only would make them eligible
• by yourself, the good of others.

I am, dearest youth,
your friend and admirer,

NESTOR IRONSIDE.

N^o 91

Thursday, June 25.

— Inest sua gratia parvis.

Little things have their value.

IT is the great rule of behaviour to follow nature. The author of the following letter is so much convinced of this truth, that he turns what would render a man of little soul exceptious, humourfom, and particular in all his actions, to a subject of rallery and mirth. He is, you must know, but half as tall as an ordinary man, but is contented to be still at his friend's elbow, and has set up a club, by which he hopes to bring those of his own size into a little reputation.

TO NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq;

S I R,

• I Remember a saying of your's concerning persons
• in low circumstances of stature, that their little-
• nefs would hardly be taken notice of, if they did not
• manifest a consciousness of it themselves in all their • behaviour. Indeed, the observation that no man is • ridiculous, for being what he is, but only in the
• affectations of being something more, is equally true
• in regard to the mind and the body.

• I question not but it will be pleasing to you to hear,
• that a set of us have formed a society, who are sworn
• to "Dare to be short," and boldly bear out the dig• nity of littleness under the noses of those enormous
• engrossers of manhood, those hyperbolical monsters
• of the species, the tall fellows that overlook us.

• The

‘ The day of our institution was the tenth of December, being the shortest of the year, on which we are to hold an annual feast over a dish of shrimps.

‘ The place we have chosen for this meeting is in the Little Piazza, not without an eye to the neighbourhood of Mr. Powel’s opera, for the performers of which we have, as becomes us, a brotherly affection.

‘ At our first resort hither an old woman brought her son to the Club-Room, desiring he might be educated in this school, because she saw here were finer boys than ordinary. However, this accident no way discouraged our designs. We began with sending invitations to those of a stature not exceeding five foot, to repair to our assembly; but the greater part returned excuses, or pretended they were not qualified.

‘ One said he was indeed but five foot at present, but represented that he should soon exceed that proportion, his periwig-maker and shoe-maker having lately promised him three inches more betwixt them.

‘ Another alledged, he was so unfortunante as to have one leg shorter than the other, and whoever had determined his stature to five foot, had taken him at a disadvantage; for when he was mounted on the other leg, he was at least five foot two inches and a half.

‘ There were some who questioned the exactness of our measures; and others, instead of complying, returned us informations of people yet shorter than themselves. In a word, almost every one recommended some neighbour or acquaintance, whom he was willing we should look upon to be less than he. We were not a little ashamed that those who are past the years of growth, and whose beards pronounce them men, should be guilty of as many unfair tricks in this point, as the most aspiring children when they are measured.

‘ We therefore proceeded to fit up the Club-Room, and provide conveniences for our accommodation. In the first place we caused a total removal of all the chairs, stools and tables, which had served the gross of mankind for many years. The disadvantages we had undergone, while we made use of these, were unspeakable. The president’s whole body was sunk in the elbow-chair; and when his arms were spread over it, he

‘ he appeared (to the great lessening of his dignity) like ‘ a child in a go-cart: It was also so wide in the seat,
 ‘ as to give a wag occasion of saying, that notwithstanding
 ‘ the president sat in it, there was a sede vacante.

‘ The table was so high that one, who came by chance ‘ to the door, seeing our chins just above the pewter ‘ dishes, took us for a circle of men that sat ready to ‘ be shaved, and sent in half a dozen barbers. Another ‘ time one of the club spoke contumeliously of the pre‘ sident, imagining he had been absent, when he was ‘ only eclipsed by a flask of Florence which stood on the ‘ table in a parallel line before his face. We therefore ‘ new-furnished the room in all respects proportionably
 ‘ to us, and had the door made lower, so as to admit no ‘ man of above five foot high, without brushing his ‘ foretop, which whoever does is utterly unqualified to ‘ sit among us.

Some of the statutes of the Club are as follow:

‘ I. If it be proved upon any member, though never ‘ so duly qualified, that he strives as much as possible to ‘ get above his size, by stretching, cocking, or the ‘ like, or that he hath stood on tiptoe in a croud, with ‘ design to be taken for as tall a man as the rest; or ‘ hath privily conveyed any large book, cricket, or ‘ other device under him, to exalt him on his seat:
 ‘ every such offender shall be sentenced to walk in ‘ pumps for a whole month.

‘ II. If any member shall take advantage from the ‘ fulness or length of his wig, or any part of his dress, ‘ or the immoderate extent of his hat, or otherwise, to ‘ seem larger or higher than he is; it is ordered, he shall ‘ wear red heels to his shoes, and a red feather in his ‘ hat, which may apparently mark and set bounds to ‘ the extremities of his small dimension, that all people
 ‘ may readily find him out between his hat and his shoes.

‘ III. If any member shall purchase a horse for his ‘ own riding above fourteen hands and an half in height,
 ‘ that horse shall forthwith be sold, a Scotch galloway ‘ bought in its stead for him, and the overplus of the ‘ money shall treat the club.

‘ IV. If

‘ IV. If any member, in direct contradiction to the ‘ fundamental laws of the society, shall wear the heels
 ‘ of his shoes exceeding one inch and half, it shall be in‘ terpreted as an open renunciation of littleness, and the ‘ criminal shall instantly be expelled. Note, The form
 ‘ to be used in expelling a member shall be in these ‘ words; “Go from among us, and be tall if you can!”

‘ It is the unanimous opinion of our whole society,
 ‘ that since the race of mankind is granted to have de‘ creased in stature from the begining to this present, ‘ it is the intent of nature itself, that men should be ‘ little; and we believe that all human kind shall at last ‘ grow down to perfection, that is to say, be reduced to ‘ our own measure.

I am very literally,

your humble servant,

BOB SHORT.

N^o 92 Friday, June 26.

Hemunculi quanti sunt, cum recogito!

Plautus.

Now I recollect, how considerable are these little men!

TO NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq;

S I R,

‘ THE Club rising early this evening I have time
 ‘ to finish my account of it. You are already ac‘ quainted with the nature and design of our institution;
 ‘ the characters of the members, and the topicks of our ‘ conversation, are what remain for the subject of this ‘ epistle.

‘ The most eminent persons of our assembly are a lit‘ tle poet, a little lover, a little politician, and a little ‘ hero. The first of these, Dick Distich by name, we ‘ have elected president, not only as he is the shortest of ‘ us all, but because he has entertained so just a sense of ‘ the stature, as to go generally in black, that he may ‘ appear yet less. Nay, to that perfection is he arrived,
 ‘ that

' that he stoops as he walks. The figure of the man is
 ' odd enough; he is a lively little creature, with long
 ' arms and legs: A spider is no ill emblem of him.
 ' He has been taken at a distance for a small windmill.
 ' But indeed what principally moved us in his favour
 ' was his talent in poetry, for he hath promised to un' dertake a long work in short verse to celebrate the ' heroes of our size. He has entertained so great a re' spect for Statius, on the score of that line,

Major in exiguo regnabat corpore virtus.

A larger portion of heroic fire
 Did his small limbs, and little breast inspire.

' that he once designed to translate the whole Thebaid
 ' for the sake of little Tydeus.

' TOM TIPTOE, a dapper black fellow, is the ' most gallant lover of the age. He is particularly ' nice in his habiliments; and to the end justice may be ' done him that way, constantly employs the same artist
 ' who makes attire for the neighbouring Princes and La' dies of quality at Mr. Powel's. The vivacity of his ' temper inclines him sometimes to boast of the favours
 ' of the fair. He was, the other night, excusing his ab' sence from the club upon account of an assignation with ' a Lady, (and, as he had the vanity to tell us, a tall
 ' one too) who had consented to the full accomplish' ment of his desires that evening; but one of the com' pany, who was his confident, assured us she was a wo' man of humour, and made the agreement on this con' dition, that his toe should be tied to hers.

' Our politician is a person of real gravity, and ' professed wisdom. Gravity in a man of this size,
 ' compared with that of one of ordinary bulk, appears
 ' like the gravity of a cat compared with that of a lion.
 ' This Gentleman is accustomed to talk to himself, and ' was once over-heard to compare his own person to a ' little cabinet, wherein are locked up all the secrets
 ' of state, and refined schemes of Princes. His face is
 ' pale and meagre, which proceeds from much watch' ing and studying for the welfare of Europe, which is ' also thought to have stunted his growth: For he hath ' destroyed

‘ destroyed his own constitution with taking care of that ‘ of the nation. He is what Monf. Balzac calls “ a great ‘ distiller of the maxims of Tacitus :” When he speaks, ‘ it is slowly and word by word, as one that is loth to ‘ enrich you too fast with his observations ; like a lim‘ beck that gives you, drop by drop, an extract of the ‘ simples in it.

‘ The last I shall mention is Tim Tuck, the hero.
‘ He is particularly remarkable for the length of his ‘ sword, which intersects his person in a cross line,
‘ and makes him appear not unlike a fly, that the boys
‘ have run a pin through and set a walking. He once ‘ challenged a tall fellow for giving him a blow on the ‘ pate with his elbow as he passed along the street. But ‘ what he especially values himself upon is, that in all ‘ the campaigns he has made, he never once ducked at ‘ the whiz of a cannon-ball. Tim was full as large
‘ at fourteen years old as he is now. This we are ten‘ der of mentioning, your little heroes being generally ‘ cholerick.

‘ These are the Gentlemen that most enliven our ‘ conversation. The discourse generally turns upon such ‘ accidents, whether fortunate or unfortunate, as are ‘ daily occasioned by our size : These we faithfully com‘ municate, either as matter of mirth or of consolation
‘ to each other. The president had lately an unlucky
‘ fall, being unable to keep his legs on a stormy day ;
‘ whereupon he informed us, it was no new disaster, but
‘ the same a certain ancient poet had been subject to,
‘ who is recorded to have been so light, that he was ‘ obliged to poise himself against the wind with lead
‘ on one side, and his own works on the other. The ‘ lover confessed the other night that he had been cured
‘ of love to a tall woman by reading over the legend
‘ of Ragotine in Scaron, with his tea, three mornings ‘ successively. Our hero rarely acquaints us with any ‘ of his unsuccessful adventures : And as for the poli‘ tician, he declares himself an utter enemy to all kind ‘ of burlesque, so will never discompose the austerity of ‘ his aspect by laughing at our adventures, much less ‘ discover any of his own in this ludicrous light. What‘ ever he tells of any accidents that befall him, is by way of complaint, nor is he to be laughed at but in his absence.
‘ of

We are likewise particularly careful to communicate in the Club all such passages of history, or characters of illustrious personages, as any way reflect honour on little men. Tim Tuck having but just reading enough for a military man, perpetually entertains us with the same stories, of little David, that conquered the mighty Goliath, and little Luxembourg that made Lewis XIV. a grand monarque, never forgetting Little Alexander the Great. Dick Distich celebrates the exceeding humanity of Augustus, who called Horace Lepidissimum Homunciolum; and is wonderfully pleased with Voiture and Scaron, for having so well described their diminutive forms to all posterity. He is peremptorily of opinion, against a great reader, and all his adherents, that Æsop was not a jot properer or handsomer than he is represented by the common pictures. But the soldier believes with the learned person above mentioned; for he thinks, none but an impudent tall author could be guilty of such an unmannerly piece of satire on little warriors, as his battle of the mouse and the frog. The politician is very proud of a certain King of Egypt, called Bocchor, who, as Diodorus assures us, was a person of very low stature, but far exceeded all that went before him in discretion and politicks.

As I am secretary to the Club, it is my business whenever we meet to take minutes of the transactions: This has enabled me to send you the foregoing particulars, as I may hereafter other memoirs. We have spies appointed in every quarter of the town, to give us informations of the misbehaviour of such refractory persons as refuse to be subject to our statutes. Whatsoever aspiring practices any of these our people shall be guilty of in their amours, single combats, or any indirect means to manhood, we shall certainly be acquainted with, and publish to the world for their punishment and reformation. For the president has granted me the sole property of exposing and shewing to the town all such intractable dwarfs, whose circumstances exempt them from being carried about

‘ about in boxes: Reserving only to himself, as the ‘ right of a poet, those smart characters that will ‘ shine in epigrams. Venerable Nestor, I salute you in ‘ the name of the Club.

BOB SHORT, Secretar.

N^o 93 Saturday, June 27.

——— Est animus lucis contemptor.

Virg. Æn. 9. v. 205.

The thing called life with ease I can disclaim.

DRYDEN.

THE following letters are curious and instructive and shall make up the business of the day.

To the Author of the GUARDIAN.

SIR,

June 25, 1713.

‘ THE inclosed is a faithful translation from an ‘ old author, which if it deserves your notice,
 ‘ let the readers guess whether he was a heathen or a ‘ christian.

I am,

your most humble servant.

‘ I cannot, my friends, forbear letting you know what ‘ I think of death; for methinks I view and understand
 ‘ it much better, the nearer I approach to it. I am con‘ vinced that your fathers, those illustrious persons whom ‘ I so much loved and honoured, do not cease to live,
 ‘ though they have passed through what we call death;
 ‘ they are undoubtedly still living, but it is that sort of ‘ life which alone deserves truly to be called life. In ‘ effect, while we are confined to bodies, we ought to ‘ esteem ourselves no other than a sort of galley-slaves at ‘ the chain, since the soul, which is somewhat divine, and ‘ descends from heaven as the place of its original, ‘ seems

‘ seems debased and dishonoured by the mixture with ‘ flesh and blood, and to be in a state of banishment
‘ from its celestial country. I cannot help thinking too,
‘ that one main reason of uniting souls to bodies was,
‘ that the great work of the universe might have spec‘ tators to admire the beautiful order of nature, the re‘ gular motion of heavenly bodies, who should strive to ‘ express that regularity in the uniformity of their lives.
‘ When I consider the boundless activity of our minds,
‘ the remembrance we have of things past, our fore‘ sight of what is to come: When I reflect on the noble ‘ discoveries and vast improvements, by which these ‘ minds have advanced arts and sciences; I am entire‘ ly persuaded, and out of all doubt, that a nature which ‘ has in itself a fund of so many excellent things cannot ‘ possibly be mortal. I observe further, that my mind is ‘ altogether simple, without the mixture of any substance
‘ or nature different from its own; I conclude from thence ‘ that it is indivisible, and consequently cannot perish.

‘ By no means think therefore, my dear friends, when ‘ I shall have quitted you, that I cease to be, or shall ‘ subsist no where. Remember that while we live to‘ gether, you do not see my mind, and yet are sure that ‘ I have one actuating and moving my body; doubt not ‘ then but that this same mind will have a being when ‘ it is separated, though you cannot then perceive its ‘ actions. What nonsense would it be to pay those ‘ honours to great men after their deaths, which we con‘ stantly do, if their souls did not then subsist? For my ‘ own part, I could never imagine that our minds live
‘ only when united to bodies, and die when they leave ‘ them; or that they shall cease to think and understand
‘ when disengaged from bodies, which without them
‘ have neither sense nor reason; on the contrary, I be‘ lieve the soul when separated from matter, to enjoy
‘ the greatest purity and simplicity of its nature, and to ‘ have much more wisdom and light than while it ‘ was united. We see when the body dies what be‘ comes of all the parts which composed it; but we do ‘ not see the mind, either in the body, or when it leaves
‘ it. Nothing more resembles death than sleep, and it is ‘ in that state that the soul chiefly shews it has some‘ thing

‘ thing divine in its nature. How much more than ‘ must it shew it, when entirely disengaged?’

To the Author of the GUARDIAN.

S I R,

‘ S Ince you have not refused to insert matters of a ‘ theological nature in those excellent papers, with ‘ which you daily both instruct and divert us, I earnestly ‘ desire you to print the following paper. The notions ‘ therein advanced are, for ought I know, new to the ‘ English reader, and if they are true, will afford room
‘ for many useful inferences.

‘ No man that reads the Evangelists, but must ob‘ serve that our blessed Saviour does upon every occasion ‘ bend all his force and zeal to rebuke and correct the ‘ hypocrisy of the Pharisees. Upon that subject he shews
‘ a warmth which one meets with in no other part of ‘ his sermons. They were so enraged at this publick ‘ detection of their secret villainies, by one who saw ‘ through all their disguises, that they joined in the pro‘ secution of him, which was so vigorous, that Pilate at ‘ last consented to his death. The frequency and ve‘ hemence of these representations of our Lord, have ‘ made the word Pharisee to be looked upon as odious ‘ among christians, and to mean only one who lays the ‘ utmost stress upon the outward, ceremonial, and ri‘ tual part of his religion, without having such an in‘ ward sense of it, as would lead him to a general and ‘ sincere observance of those duties which can only arise
‘ from the heart, and which cannot be supposed to spring
‘ from a desire of applause or profit.

‘ This is plain from the History of the life and ‘ actions of our Lord in the four Evangelists. One of ‘ them, St. Luke, continued his history down in a second ‘ part, which we commonly call The Acts of the Apostles.
‘ Now it is observable, that in this second part in which ‘ he gives a particular account of what the Apostles did
‘ and suffered at Jerusalem upon their first entering upon ‘ their commission, and also of what St. Paul did after ‘ he was consecrated to the Apostleship until his journey
‘ to Rome, we find not only no opposition to christianity
‘ from

‘ from the Pharisees, but several signal occasions in which ‘ they assisted its first teachers, when the christian church ‘ was in its infant state. The true, zealous and hearty ‘ persecutors of christianity at that time were the Sad‘ ducees, whom we may truly call the Free-thinkers
‘ among the Jews. They believed neither resurrection, ‘ nor angel, nor spirit, i. e. in plain English, they were ‘ Deists at least, if not Atheists. They could outwardly ‘ comply with, and conform to the establishment in ‘ church and state, and they pretended forsooth to belong
‘ only to a particular sect; and because there was nothing
‘ in the law of Moses which in so many words asserted
‘ a resurrection, they appeared to adhere to that in a ‘ particular manner beyond any other part of the Old ‘ Testament. These men therefore justly dreaded the ‘ spreading of Christianity after the ascension of our Lord, ‘ because it was wholly founded upon his Resurrection.

‘ Accordingly therefore when Peter and John had ‘ cured the lame man at the beautiful gate of the ‘ temple, and had thereby raised a wonderful expecta‘ tion of themselves among the people, the priests and ‘ Sadducees, Acts iv. clapt them up, and sent them away
‘ for the first time with a severe reprimand. Quickly af‘ ter, when the deaths of Ananias and Sapphira, and the ‘ many miracles wrought after those severe instances of ‘ the Apostolical Power had alarmed the priests, who ‘ looked upon the temple-worship, and consequently ‘ their bread, to be struck at; these priests, and all they
‘ that were with them, who were of the sect of the Sad-‘ duces, imprisoned the Apostles, intending to examine ‘ them in the great council the next day. Where, when
‘ the council met, and the priests and Sadducees pro‘ posed to proceed with great rigour against them, we ‘ find that Gamaliel, a very eminent Pharisee, St. Paul’s ‘ master, a man of great authority among the people,
‘ many of whose determinations we have still preserved
‘ in the body of the Jewish traditions, commonly call‘ ed the Talmud, opposed their heat, and told them,
‘ for ought they knew, the Apostles might be acted by ‘ the Spirit of God, and that in such a case it would be ‘ in vain to oppose them, since if they did so, they ‘ would only fight against God, whom they could ‘ not

‘ not overcome. Gamaliel was so considerable a man ‘ among his own sect, that we may reasonably believe ‘ he spoke the sense of his party as well as his own. St.
‘ Stephen’s martyrdom came on presently after, in which ‘ we do not find the Pharisees, as such, had any hand;
‘ it is probable that he was prosecuted by those who ‘ had before imprisoned Peter and John. One novice ‘ indeed of that sect was so zealous, that he kept the ‘ clothes of those that stoned him. This novice, whose ‘ zeal went beyond all bounds, was the great St. Paul,
‘ who was peculiarly honoured with a call from heaven
‘ by which he was converted, and he was afterwards, by ‘ God himself, appointed to be the apostle of the Gen‘ tiles. Besides him, and him too reclaimed in so glo‘ rious a manner; we find no one Pharisee either ‘ named or hinted at by St. Luke, as an opposer of ‘ Christianity in those earliest days. What others might ‘ do we know not. But we find the Sadducees pursuing ‘ St. Paul even to death at his coming to Jerusalem, in ‘ the 21st of the Acts. He then, upon all occasions, ‘ owned himself to be a Pharisee. In the 22^d chapter he ‘ told the people, that he had been bred up at the feet
‘ of Gamaliel after the strictest manner, in the law of ‘ his fathers. In the 23^d chapter he told the council ‘ that he was a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee, and that ‘ he was accused for asserting the hope and resurrec‘ tion of the dead, which was their darling doctrine.
‘ Hereupon the Pharisees stood by him, though they ‘ did not own our Saviour to be the Messiah, yet they ‘ would not deny but some angel or spirit might have ‘ spoken to him, and then if they opposed him, they ‘ should fight against God. This was the very argu‘ ment Gamaliel had used before. The Resurrection of ‘ our Lord, which they saw so strenuously asserted by ‘ the apostles, whose miracles they also saw and owned, ‘ (Acts iv. 16.) seems to have struck them, and many ‘ of them were converted (Acts xv. 5.) even without ‘ a miracle, and the rest stood still and made no oppo‘ sition.

‘ We see here what the part was which the Pharisees
‘ acted in this important conjuncture. Of the Sadducees
‘ we meet not with one in the whole apostolic history
‘ that

‘ that was converted. We hear of no miracles wrought
‘ to convince any of them, though there was an eminent ‘ one wrought to reclaim a Pharisee. St. Paul, we see,
‘ after his conversion always gloried in his having been ‘ bred a Pharisee. He did so to the people of Jerusalem,
‘ to the great council, to King Agrippa, and to the Phi‘ lippians. So that from hence we may justly infer, that ‘ it was not their institution, which was in itself lauda‘ ble, which our blessed Saviour found fault with, but ‘ it was their hypocrisy, their covetousness, their op‘ pression, their overvaluing themselves upon their zeal
‘ for the ceremonial law, and their adding to that yoke
‘ by their traditions, all which were not properly es‘ sentials of their institution, that our Lord blamed.

‘ But I must not run on. What I would observe,
‘ Sir, is, that Atheism is more dreadful, and would be ‘ more grievous to human society, if it were invested
‘ with sufficient power, than Religion under any shape, ‘ where its professors do at the bottom believe what they ‘ profess. I despair not of a papist’s conversion, though ‘ I would not willingly lie at a zealot papist’s mercy,
‘ (and no protestant would, if he knew what popery is)
‘ though he truly believes in our Saviour. But the Free-‘ thinker, who scarcely believes there is a God, and cer‘ tainly disbelieves revelation, is a very terrible animal.
‘ He will talk of Natural Rights, and the just free‘ doms of mankind, no longer than until he himself gets ‘ into power; and by the instance before us, we have ‘ small grounds to hope for his salvation, or that God
‘ will ever vouchsafe him sufficient grace to reclaim him
‘ from errors, which have been so immediately levelled ‘ against himself.

‘ If these notions be true, as I verily believe they ‘ are, I thought they might be worth publishing at this ‘ time, for which reason they are sent in this manner ‘ to you by,

S I R,

your most humble servant,

M. N.

Monday,

N^o 94 Monday, June 29.

*Ingenium sibi quod vacuas desumpsit Athenas,
Et studiis annos septem dedit, insenuitque
Libris & curis; statuâ taciturnius exit
Plerumque, & risu populum quatit—*

Hor. Ep. 2. l. 2. v. 81.

IMITATED.

The man, who stretch'd in Isis' calm retreat,
To books and study gives seven years compleat,
See! strow'd with learned dust, his night-cap on,
He walks, an object new beneath the sun!

The boys flock round him, and the people stare:
So stiff, so mute! some statue, you would swear,
Stept from its pedestal to take the air!

POPE.

SINCE our success in worldly matters may be said to depend upon our education, it will be very much to the purpose to enquire if the foundations of our fortune could not be laid deeper and surer than they are. The education of youth falls of necessity under the direction of those who, through fondness to us and our abilities, as well as to their own unwarrantable conjectures, are very likely to be deceived; and the misery of it is, that the poor creatures, who are the sufferers upon wrong advances, seldom find out the errors, until they become irretrievable. As the greater number of all degrees and conditions have their education at the Universities, the errors which I conceive to be in those places fall most naturally under the following observation. The first mismanagement in these publick nurseries, is the calling together a number of pupils, of howsoever different ages, views and capacities, to the same lectures: But surely there can be no reason to think, that a delicate tender babe, just weaned from the bosom of his mother, indulged in all the impertinencies nencies of his heart's desire, should be equally capable of receiving a lecture of philosophy, with a hardy ruffian of full age, who has been occasionally scourged through some of the great schools, groaned under constant rebuke and chastisement, and maintained a ten years war with literature, under very strict and rugged discipline.

I know the reader has pleased himself with an answer to this already, viz. That an attention to the particular abilities and designs of the pupil, cannot be expected from the trifling salary paid upon such account. The price indeed which is thought a sufficient reward, for any advantages a youth can receive from a man of learning, is an abominable consideration; the enlarging which, would not only increase the care of tutors but would be a very great encouragement to such as designed to take this province upon them, to furnish themselves with a more general and extensive knowledge. As the case now stands, those of the first quality pay their tutors but little above half so much as they do their footmen: What morality, what history, what taste of the modern languages, what, lastly, that can make a man happy, or great, may not be expected in return for such an immense treasure: It is monstrous indeed, that the men of the best estates and families, are more solicitous about the tutelage of a favourite dog or horse, than of their heirs male. The next evil is the pedantical veneration that is maintained at the University for the Greek and Latin, which puts the youth upon such exercises as many of them are incapable of performing with any tolerable success. Upon this emergency they are succoured by the allowed wits of their respective colleges, who are always ready to befriend them with two or three hundred Latin or Greek words thrown together, with a very small proportion of sense.

But the most established error of our university education, is the general neglect of all the little qualifications and accomplishments which make up the character of a well-bred man, and the general attention to what is called deep learning. But as there are very few blessed with a genius, that shall force success by the strength of itself alone, and few occasions of life that require the aid of such genius; the vast majority of the unblest souls ought to store themselves with such acquisitions, in which every man has capacity to make a considerable progress, and from which every common occasion of life may reap great advantage. The persons that may be useful to us in the making our fortunes, are such as are already happy in their own; I may proceed to say, that the men of figure and family are more superficial in their education than those of a less degree, and, of course, are ready to encourage and protect that qualification in another which they themselves are masters of. For their own application implies the pursuit of something commendable; and when they see their own characters proposed as imitable, they must be won by such an irresistible flattery. But those of the university, who are to make their fortunes by a ready insinuation into the favour of their superiors, condemn this necessary foppery so far, as not to be able to speak common sense to them, without hesitation, perplexity and confusion. For want of care in acquiring less accomplishments which adorn ordinary life, he that is so unhappy as to be born poor, is condemned to a method that will very probably keep him so.
strength

I hope all the learned will forgive me what is said purely for their service, and tends to no other injury against them, than admonishing them not to overlook such little qualifications, as they every day see defeat their greater excellencies in the pursuit both of reputation and fortune.

If the youth of the university were to be advanced, according to their sufficiency in the severe progress of learning; or “riches could be secured to men of understanding, and favour to men of skill;” then indeed all studies were solemnly to be defied, that did not seriously pursue the main end: But since our merit is to be tried by the unskilful many, we must gratify the sense of the injudicious majority, satisfying ourselves that the shame of a trivial qualification sticks only upon him that prefers it to one more substantial. The more accomplishments a man is master of, the better is he prepared for a more extended acquaintance, and upon these considerations without doubt, the author of the Italian book called Il Cortegiano, or The Courtier, makes throwing the bar, vaulting the horse, nay even wrestling, with several other as low qualifications, necessary for the man whom he figures for a perfect courtier; for this reason no doubt, because his end being to find grace in the eyes of men of all degrees, the means to pursue this end, was the furnishing him with such real and seeming excellencies as each degree had its particular taste of. But those of the University, instead of employing their leisure hours in the pursuit of such acquisitions as would shorten their way to better fortune, enjoy those moments at certain houses in the town, or repair to others at very pretty distances out of it, where “they drink and forget their poverty, and remember their misery no more.” Persons of this indigent education are apt to pass upon themselves and others for modest, especially in the point of behaviour; though it is easy to prove, that this mistaken modesty not only arises from ignorance, but begets the appearance of its opposite, pride. For he that is conscious of his own insufficiency to address his superiors without appearing ridiculous, is by that betrayed into the same neglect and indifference towards them, which may bear the construction of pride. From this habit they begin to argue against the base submissive application from men of letters to men of fortune, and be grieved when they see, as Ben Johnson says,

—The learned pate

Duck to the golden fool—

though these are points of necessity and convenience, and to be esteemed submissions rather to the occasion than to the person. It was a fine answer of Diogenes, who being asked in mockery, why philosophers were the followers of rich men, and not rich men of philosophers; replied, Because the one knew what they had need of, and the other did not. It certainly must be difficult to prove, that a man of business or a profession ought not to be what we call a Gentleman, but yet very few of them are so. Upon this account they have little conversation with those who might do them most service, but upon such occasions only as application is made made to them in their particular calling; and for any thing they can do or say in such matters have their reward, and therefore rather receive than confer an obligation: Whereas he that adds his being agreeable to his being serviceable, is constantly in a capacity of obliging others. The character of a beau is, I think, what the men that pretend to learning please themselves in ridiculing; and yet if we compare these persons as we see them in publick, we shall find that the lettered coxcombs without good breeding give more just occasion to rallery, than the unlettered coxcombs with it: As our behaviour falls within the judgment of more persons than our conversation, and a failure in it is therefore more visible. What pleasant victories over the loud, the saucy, and the illiterate, would attend the men of learning and breeding; which qualifications, could we but join them, would beget such a confidence, as, arising from good sense and good nature, would never let us oppress others, or desert ourselves. In short, whether a man intends a life of business or pleasure, it is impossible to pursue either in an elegant manner, without the help of good-breeding. I shall conclude with the face at least of a regular discourse; and say, if it is our behaviour and address upon all common occasions that prejudice people in our favour or to our disadvantage, and the more substantial parts, as our learning and industry, cannot possibly appear but to few; it is not justifiable to spend so much time, in that which so very few are judges of, and utterly neglect that which falls within the censure of so many.

N^o 95 Tuesday, June 30.

—Aliena negotia centum— Hor. Sat. 6. l. 2. v. 33.
A croud of petitioners. CREECH.

I Find business increase upon me very much, as will appear by the following letters.

SIR,

Oxford, June 24, 1713.

‘ THis day Mr. Oliver Purville, Gentleman, pro‘ perty-man to the Theatre-Royal in the room of ‘ Mr. William Peer, deceased, arrived here in widow ‘ Bartlett’s waggon. He is an humble member of the ‘ little club, and a passionate man, which makes him
‘ tell the disasters which he met with on his road hi‘ ther, a little too incoherently to be rightly understood.
‘ By what I can gather from him, it seems that within ‘ three miles of this side Wickham the party was set ‘ upon by highwaymen. Mr. Purville was supercargo to ‘ the great hamper in which were the following goods.
‘ The chains of Jaffeir and Pierre; the crowns and ‘ scepters of the posterity of Banquo; the bull, bear
‘ and horse of captain Otter; bones, skulls, pickaxes
‘ and a bottle of brandy, and five muskets; four‘ score pieces of stock-gold, and thirty pieces of tin-‘ silver hid in a green purse within a skull. These the ‘ robbers, by being put up safe, supposed to be true,
‘ and rid off with, not forgetting to take Mr. Purville’s ‘ own current coin. They broke the armour of Jacomo, ‘ which was cased up in the same hamper, and one of ‘ them put on the said Jacomo’s mask to escape. They ‘ also did several extravagancies with no other purpose
‘ but to do mischief; they broke a mace for the Lord-‘ Mayor of London. They also destroyed the world,
‘ the sun and moon, which lay loose in the waggon.
‘ Mrs. Bartlett is frightened out of her wits, for Purville ‘ says he has her servant’s receipt for the world, and ‘ expects she shall make it good. Purville is resolved ‘ to take no lodgings in town, but makes behind the ‘ scenes a bed-chamber of the hamper: His bed is that
‘ in which Desdemona is to die, and he uses the sheet
‘ in which Mr. Johnson is tied up in a comedy) for ‘ his own bed of nights. It is to be hoped the great ‘ ones will consider Mr. Purville’s loss. One of the ‘ robbers has sent, by a country fellow the stock gold,
‘ and had the impudence to write the following letter ‘ to Mr. Purville.

SIR,

S I R,

“ I F you had been an honest man, you would not “ have put bad money upon men who ventured
 “ their lives for it. But we shall see you when you “ come back.

Philip Scowrer.

“ There are many things in this matter which em“ ploy the ablest men here, as whether an action will “ lie for the world among people who make the most “ of words; or whether it be adviseable to call that “ round ball the world, and if we do not call it so, “ whether we can have any remedy? The ablest law“ yer here says there is no help; for if you call it the “ world, it will be answered how could the world be “ in one shire, to wit, that of Buckingham; for the “ county must be named, and if you do not name it
 “ we shall certainly be nonsuited. I do not know whe“ ther I make myself understood; but you understand “ me right when you believe I am

your most humble servant,

and faithful correspondent,

The PROMPTER.

Honoured S I R,

“ Y Our character of Guardian makes it not only “ necessary, but becoming, to have several em“ ployed under you. And being myself ambitious of “ your service, I am now your humble petitioner to be “ admitted into a place I do not find yet disposed of—I “ mean that of your lion-catcher. It was, Sir, for want “ of such commission from your honour, that very many “ lions have lately escaped. However, I made bold to “ distinguish a couple. One I found in a coffee-house—
 “ He was of the larger sort, looked fierce, and roared “ loud. I considered wherein he was dangerous; and “ accordingly expressed my displeasure against him, in “ such a manner upon his chaps, that now he is not “ able to shew his teeth. The other was a small lion,
 “ who was slipping by me as I stood at the corner of an “ alley

‘ alley—I smelt the creature presently, and caught at ‘ him, but he got off with the loss of a lock of hair ‘ only, which proved of a dark colour. This and the ‘ teeth abovementioned I have by me, and design them
 ‘ both for a present to Button’s coffee-house.

‘ Besides this way of dealing with them, I have ‘ invented many curious traps, snares, and artificial ‘ baits, which, it is humbly conceived, cannot fail of ‘ clearing the kingdom of the whole species in a short ‘ time.

‘ This is humbly submitted to your honour’s confi-‘ deration; and I am ready to appear before your ho‘ nour, to answer to such questions as you, in your ‘ great wisdom, shall think meet to ask, whenever you ‘ please to command, your honour’s most obedient humble servant,

Midsummer-Day.

HERCULES CRABTREE.

N. B. I have an excellent nose.

Tom’s coffee-house in Cornhill, June 19, 1713.

S I R,

‘ R eading in your yesterday’s paper a letter from ‘ Daniel Button, in recommendation of his coffee‘ house for polite conversation and freedom from the ‘ argument by the button, I make bold to send you
 ‘ this to assure you, that at this place there is as yet ‘ kept up as good a decorum in the debates of politicks, ‘ trade, stocks, &c. as at Will’s, or at any other coffee‘ house at your end of the town. In order therefore to ‘ preserve this house from the arbitrary way of forcing ‘ an assent, by seizing on the collar, neckcloth, or ‘ any other part of the body or dress, it would be of ‘ signal service if you would be pleased to intimate, that ‘ we, who frequent this place after Exchange time, shall ‘ have the honour of seeing you here sometimes; for that ‘ would be a sufficient guard to us from all such petty ‘ practices, and also be a means of enabling the honest ‘ man, who keeps the house, to continue to serve us
 ‘ with

‘ with the best bohea, and green tea, and coffee, and ‘ will in a particular manner oblige,

S I R,

your most humble servant,

JAMES DIAPER.

‘ P. S. The room above stairs is the handsomest
 ‘ in this part of the town, furnished with large peer-‘ glasses for persons to view themselves in, who have ‘ no business with any body else, and every way fit for ‘ the reception of fine Gentlemen.

S I R,

‘ I Am a very great scholar, wear a fair wig, and ‘ have an immense number of books curiously bound
 ‘ and gilt. I excel in a singularity of diction and man‘ ners, and visit persons of the first quality. In fine,
 ‘ I have by me a great quantity of cockle-shells, which,
 ‘ however, does not defend me from the insults of ano‘ ther learned man, who neglects me in a most insupport‘ able manner: For I have it from persons of undoubt-
 ‘ ed veracity, that he presumed once to pass by my door ‘ without waiting upon me. Whether this be consistent ‘ with the respect which we learned men ought to have
 ‘ for each other, I leave to your judgment, and am,

S I R, your affectionate friend,

PHILAUTUS.

Friend NESTOR,

Oxford, June 18, 1713.

‘ I Had always a great value for thee, and have so still.
 ‘ But I must tell thee, that thou strangely affectest to ‘ be sage and solid: Now pr’ythee let me observe to ‘ thee, that though it be common enough for people
 ‘ as they grow older to grow graver, yet it is not so ‘ common to become wiser. Verily to me thou seemest
 ‘ to keep strange company, and with a positive suffici‘ ency, incident to old age, to follow too much thine ‘ own inventions. Thou dependest too much likewise ‘ upon thy correspondence here, and art apt to take

‘ people’s words without consideration. But my present business with thee is to expostulate with thee about a late paper occasioned, as thou say’st, by Jack Lizard’s information, (my very good friend) that we are to have a Publick Act.

‘ Now, I say, in that paper there is nothing contended for which any man of common-sense will deny : All that is there said, is, that no man or woman’s reputation ought to be blasted, i. e. no body ought to have an ill character who does not deserve it : Very true; but here’s this false consequence insinuated, that therefore no body ought to hear of their faults; or in other words, let any body do as much ill as he pleases, he ought not to be told of it. Art thou a patriot, Mr. Ironside, and wilt thou affirm, that arbitrary proceedings and oppression ought to be concealed or justified? Art thou a Gentleman, and wouldst thou have base, sordid, ignoble tricks connived at or tolerated? Art thou a scholar, and wouldst thou have learning and good manners discouraged? Wouldst thou have cringing servility, parasitical shuffling, fawning, and dishonest compliances made the road to success? Art thou a christian, and wouldst thou have all villanies within the law practised with impunity? Should they not be told of it? It is certain, there are many things which though there are no laws against them, yet ought not to be done; and in such cases there is no argument so likely to hinder their being done, as the fear of publick shame for doing them. The two great reasons against an Act are always the saving of money, and hiding of roguery.

“ Here many things are omitted which will be in the speech of the Terræfilius.”

‘ And now, dear old IRON, I am glad to hear that at these years thou hast galantry enough left to have thoughts of setting up for a knight-errant, a tamer of monsters, and a defender of distressed damsels.

‘ Adieu, old fellow, and let me give thee this advice at parting: E’en get thyself case-hardened; for though the very best steel may snap, yet old iron you know will rust.

UMBRA.
Mr.

‘ Be just, and publish this’.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

Oxford, Sat. 27, 1713.

‘ THIS day arrived the vanguard of the theatrical ‘ army. Your friend, Mr. George Powel, com‘ manded the artillery both celestial and terrestrial. The ‘ magazines of snow, lightning and thunder, are safely ‘ laid up. We have had no disaster on the way, but that ‘ of breaking Cupid’s bow by a jolt of the waggon; but ‘ they tell us they make them very well in Oxford. We ‘ all went in a body, and were shown our chambers in ‘ Lincoln-College. The Terræfilius expects you down,
 ‘ and we of the theatre design to bring you into town
 ‘ with all our guards. Those of Alexander the Great, ‘ Julius Cæsar, and the faithful retinue of Cato, shall ‘ meet you at Shotover. The ghost of Hamlet, and the ‘ statue which supped with Don John, both say, that ‘ though it be at noon-day, they will attend your entry.
 ‘ Every body expects you with great impatience. We ‘ shall be in very good order when all are come down:
 ‘ We have sent to town for a brick-wall which we ‘ forgot. The sea is to come by water.

Your most humble servant,

and faithful correspondent,

The PROMPTER.

N^o 96

Wednesday, July 1.

*Cuncti adsint, meritæque expectent præmia palmæ.*Virg. Æn. 5. v. 70.

Let all be present at the games prepar’d;

And joyful victors wait the just reward. DRYDEN.

THere is no maxim in politicks more indisputable, than that a nation should have many honours in reserve for those who do national services. This raises emulation, cherishes publick merit, and inspires every one with an ambition which promotes the good of his country. The less expensive these honours are

are to the publick, the more still do they turn to its advantage.

The Romans abounded with these little honorary rewards, that without conferring wealth or riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. An oaken garland to be worn on festivals and publick ceremonies, was the glorious recompence of one who had covered a citizen in battle. A soldier would not only venture his life for a mural crown, but think the most hazardous enterprize sufficiently repaid by so noble a donation.

But among all honorary rewards which are neither dangerous nor detrimental to the donor, I remember none so remarkable as the titles which are bestowed by the Emperor of China. These are never given to any subject, says Monsieur le Conte, until the subject is dead. If he has pleased his Emperor to the last, he is called in all publick memorials by the title which the Emperor confers on him after his death, and his children take their ranks accordingly. This keeps the ambitious subject in a perpetual dependence, making him always vigilant and active, and in every thing conformable to the will of his sovereign.

There are no honorary rewards among us, which are more esteemed by the person who receives them, and are cheaper to the Prince, than the giving of medals. But there is something in the modern manner of celebrating a great action in medals, which makes such a reward much less valuable than it was among the Romans. There is generally but one coin stamped on the occasion, which is made a present to the person who is celebrated on it: By this means his whole fame is in his own custody. The applause that is bestowed upon him is too much limited and confined. He is in possession of an honour which the world perhaps knows nothing of. He may be a great man in his own family; his wife and children may see the monument of an exploit, which the publick in a little time is a stranger to. The Romans took a quite different method in this particular. Their medals were their current money. When an action deserved to be recorded in coin, it was stamped perhaps upon an hundred thousand pieces of money like our shillings, lings, or halfpence, which were issued out of the mint, and became current. This method published every noble action to advantage, and in a short space of time spread through the whole Roman empire. The Romans were so careful to preserve the memory of great events upon their coins, that when any particular piece of money grew very scarce, it was often re-coined by a succeeding Emperor, many years after the death of the Emperor to whose honour it was first struck.

* A friend of mine drew up a project of this kind during the late ministry, which would then have been put in execution had it not been too busy a time for thoughts of that nature. As this project has been very much talked of by the gentleman above-mentioned to men of the greatest genius, as well as quality; I am informed there is now a design on foot for executing the proposal which was then made, and that we shall have several farthings and half-pence charged on the reverse with many of the glorious particulars of her Majesty's reign. This is one of those arts of peace which may very well deserve to be cultivated, and which may be of great use to posterity.

As I have in my possession the copy of the paper above-mentioned, which was delivered to the late Lord Treasurer, I shall here give the publick a sight of it. For I do not question, but that the curious part of my readers will be very much pleased to see so much matter and so many useful hints upon this subject laid together in so clear and concise a manner.

THE English have not been so careful as other polite nations to preserve the memory of their great actions and events on medals. Their subjects are few, their mottos and devices mean, and the coins themselves not numerous enough to spread among the people, or descend to posterity.

The French have outdone us in these particulars, and, by the establishment of a society for the invention of proper inscriptions and designs, have the whole history of their present king in a regular series of medals.

* Dr. Swift.

They

They have failed, as well as the English, in coining so small a number of each kind, and those of such costly metals, that each species may be lost in a few ages, and is at present no where to be met with but in the cabinets of the curious.

The ancient Romans took the only effectual method to disperse and preserve their medals, by making them their current money.

Every thing glorious or useful, as well in peace as war, gave occasion to a different coin. Not only an expedition, victory, or triumph, but the exercise of a solemn devotion, the remission of a duty or tax, a new temple, sea-port, or high-way, were transmitted to posterity after this manner.

The greatest variety of devices are on their copper money, which have most of the designs that are to be met with on the gold and silver, and several peculiar to that metal only. By this means they were dispersed into the remotest corners of the empire, came into the possession of the poor as well as rich, and were in no danger of perishing in the hands of those that might have melted down coins of a more valuable metal.

Add to all this, that the designs were invented by men of genius, and executed by a decree of senate.

It is therefore proposed,

I. That the English farthings and half-pence be re-coined upon the union of the two nations.

II. That they bear devices and inscriptions alluding to all the most remarkable parts of her Majesty's reign.

III. That there be a society established for the finding out of proper subjects, inscriptions, and devices.

IV. That no subject, inscription, or device be stamped without the approbation of this society, nor, if it be thought proper, without the authority of privy-council.

By this means, medals that are at present only a dead treasure, or mere curiosities, will be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time, perpetuate the glories of her Majesty's reign, reward the labours of her greatest subjects, keep alive in the people a gratitude for publick services, and excite the emulation of posterity. To these generous purposes nothing

nothing can so much contribute as medals of this kind, which are of undoubted authority, of necessary use and observation, not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place; properties not to be found in books, statues, pictures, buildings, or any other monuments of illustrious actions.

N^o 97

Thursday, July 2.

— Furor est post omnia perdere naulum.

Juv. Sat. 8. v. 97.

'Tis mad to lavish what their rapine left.

STEPNEY.

S I R,

‘ I Was left a thousand pounds by an uncle; and be‘ ing a man to my thinking very likely to get a ‘ rich widow, I laid aside all thoughts of making my ‘ fortune any other way, and without loss of time
 ‘ made my application to one who had buried her ‘ husband about a week before. By the help of some ‘ of her the friends, who were my relations, I got into ‘ her company when she would see no man besides my‘ self and her lawyer, who is a little rivelled, spindle-‘ shanked Gentleman, and married to boot, so that I ‘ had no reason to fear him. Upon my first seeing her,
 ‘ she said in conversation within my hearing, that she ‘ thought a pale complexion the most agreeable either ‘ in man or woman: Now you must know, Sir, my ‘ face is as white as chalk. This gave me some en‘ couragement; so that to mend the matter I bought a ‘ fine flaxen long wig that cost me thirty guineas, and ‘ found an opportunity of seeing her in it the next day.
 ‘ She then let drop some expressions about an agate
 ‘ snuff-box. I immediately took the hint, and bought ‘ one, being unwilling to omit any thing that might ‘ make me desirable in her eyes. I was betrayed after
 ‘ the same manner into a brocade waistcoat, a sword-‘ knot, a pair of silver-fringed gloves, and a diamond ‘ ring.

ring. But whether out of fickleness or a design upon me, I cannot tell; but I found by her discourse, that what she liked one day, she disliked another: So that in six months space I was forced to equip myself above a dozen times. As I told you before, I took her hints at a distance, for I could never find an opportunity of talking with her directly to the point. All this time, however, I was allowed the utmost familiarities with her lap-dog, and have played with it above an hour together, without receiving the least reprimand, and had many other marks of favour shown me, which I thought amounted to a promise. If she chanced to drop her fan, she received it from my hands with great civility. If she wanted any thing, I reached it for her. I have filled her tea-pot above an hundred times, and have afterwards received a dish of it from her own hands. Now, Sir, do you judge, if after such encouragements she was not obliged to marry me. I forgot to tell you that I kept a chair by the week, on purpose to carry me thither and back again. Not to trouble you with a long letter, in the space of about a twelve-month I have run out of my whole thousand pound upon her, having laid out the last fifty in a new suit of clothes, in which I was resolved to receive her final answer, which amounted to this, that she was engaged to another; that she never dreamt I had any such thing in my head as marriage; and that she thought I had frequented her house only because I loved to be in company with my relations. This, you know, Sir, is using a man like a fool, and so I told her; but the worst of it is, that I have spent my fortune to no purpose. All therefore that I desire of you is, to tell me whether upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have here related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice. Your advice in this particular will very much oblige your most humble admirer,

SIMON SOFTLY.

Before

Before I answer Mr. Softly's request, I find myself under a necessity of discussing two nice points: First of all, What it is, in cases of this nature, that amounts to an encouragement; and secondly, What it is that amounts to a promise. Each of which subjects requires more time to examine than I am at present master of. Besides, I would have my friend Simon consider, whether he has any counsel that will undertake his cause "in forma pauperis," he having unluckily disabled himself, by his own account of the matter, from prosecuting his suit any other way.

In answer however to Mr. Softly's request, I shall acquaint him with a method made use of by a young fellow in King Charles the Second's reign, whom I shall here call Silvio, who had long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow, whose true name I shall conceal under that of Zelinda. Silvio, who was much more smitten with her fortune than her person, finding a twelve-month's application unsuccessful, was resolved to make a saving bargain of it; and since he could not get the widow's estate into his possession, to recover at least what he had laid out of his own in the pursuit of it.

In order to this he presented her with a bill of costs; having particularized in it the several expences he had been at in his long perplexed amour. Zelinda was so pleased with the humour of the fellow, and his frank way of dealing, that, upon the perusal of the bill, she sent him a purse of fifteen hundred guineas, by the right application of which, the lover, in less than a year, got a woman of a greater fortune than her he had missed. The several articles in the bill of costs I pretty well remember, though I have forgotten the particular sum charged to each article.

Laid out in supernumerary full-bottom wigs.

Fiddles for a serenade, with a speaking-trumpet.

Gilt paper in letters, and billot-doux, with perfumed wax.

A ream of sonnets and love-verses, purchased at different times of Mr. Triplett, at a crown a sheet.

To Zelinda two sticks of May-cherries.

Last summer at several times, a bushel of peaches.

Three

Three porters whom I planted about her to watch her motions.

The first who stood centry near her door.

The second who had his stand at the stables where her coach was put up.

The third who kept watch at the corner of the street where Ned Courtall lives, who has since married her.

Two additional porters planted over her during the whole month of May.

Five conjurers kept in pay all last winter.

Spy-money to John Trott her footman, and Mrs. Sarah Wheedle her companion.

A new Conningmark blade to fight Ned Courtall.

To Zelinda's woman (Mrs. Abigail) an Indian fan, a dozen pair of white kid gloves, a piece of Flanders lace, and fifteen guineas in dry money.

Secret-service money to Betty at the Ring.

Ditto to Mrs. Tape the mantua-maker.

Loss of time.

N^o 98

Friday, July 3.

In sese redit——

Virg. Georg. 4. v. 444.

He resumes himself.

THE first who undertook to instruct the world in single papers was Isaac Bickerstaff of famous memory: A man nearly related to the family of the IRONSIDES. We have often smoked a pipe together; for I was so much in his books, that at his decease he left me a silver standish, a pair of spectacles, and the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations.

The venerable Isaac was succeeded by a Gentleman of the same family, very memorable for the shortness of his face and of his speeches. This ingenious author published his thoughts, and held his tongue with great applause, for two years together.

I NESTOR IRONSIDE, have now for some time undertaken to fill the place of these my two renowned kinsmen and predecessors. For it is observed of every branch of our family, that we have all of us a wonderful inclination to give good advice, though it is remarked of some of us, that we are apt on this occasion rather to give than take.

However it be, I cannot but observe with some secret pride, that this way of writing diurnal papers has not succeeded for any space of time in the hands of any persons who are not of our line. I believe I speak within compass, when I affirm that above a hundred different authors have endeavoured after our family-way of writing, some of which have been writers in other kinds of the greatest eminence in the kingdom; but I do not know how it has happened, they have none of them hit upon the art. Their projects have always dropt after a few unsuccessful essays. It puts me in mind of a story which was lately told me of a pleasant friend of mine, who has a very fine hand on the violin. His maid-servant seeing his instrument lying upon the table, and being sensible there was musick in it, if she knew how to fetch it out, drew the bow over every part of the strings, and at last told her master she had tried the fiddle all over, but could not for her heart find where about the tune lay.

But though the whole burden of such a paper is only fit to rest on the shoulders of a Bickerstaff or an Ironside; there are several who can acquit themselves of a single day's labour in it with suitable abilities. These are gentlemen whom I have often invited to this trial of wit, and who have several of them acquitted themselves to my private emolument; as well as to their own reputation. My paper among the republick of letters is the Ulysses his bow, in which every man of wit or learning may try his strength. One who does not care to write a book without being sure of his abilities, may see by this means if his parts and talents are to the publick taste.

This I take to be of great advantage to men of the best sense, who are always diffident of their private judgment, until it receives a sanction from the publick.

“ Provoco

“Provoco ad populum,” I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. It is but a melancholy comfort for an author to be satisfied that he has written up to the rules of art, when he finds he has no admirers in the world besides himself. Common modesty should, on this occasion, make a man suspect his own judgment, and that he misapplies the rules of his art, when he finds himself singular in the applause which he bestows upon his own writings.

The publick is always even with an author who has not a just deference for them. The contempt is reciprocal. I laugh at every one, said an old Cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so, replied the philosopher; then let me tell you, you live the merriest life of any man in Athens.

It is not therefore the least use of this my paper, that it gives a timorous writer, and such is every good one, an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof, and of founding the publick before he launches into it. For this reason I look upon my paper as a kind of nursery for authors, and question not but some, who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names in more long and elaborate works.

After having thus far enlarged upon this particular, I have one favour to beg of the candid and courteous reader, that when he meets with any thing in this paper which may appear a little dull and heavy (though I hope this will not be often) he will believe it is the work of some other person, and not of NESTOR IRONSIDE.

I have, I know not how, been drawn into tattle of myself, “more majorum,” almost the length of a whole GUARDIAN; I shall therefore fill up the remaining part of it with what still relates to my own person, and my correspondents. Now I would have them all know, that on the twentieth instant it is my intention to erect a Lion’s head in imitation of those I have described in Venice, through which all the private intelligence of that Commonwealth is said to pass. This head is to open a most wide and voracious mouth, which shall take in such letters and papers as are conveyed to me by my correspon-

correspondents, it being my resolution to have a particular regard to all such matters as come to my hands through the mouth of the Lion. There will be under it a box, of which the key will be kept in my own custody, to receive such papers as are dropped into it. Whatever the Lion swallows I shall digest for the use of the publick. This head requires some time to finish, the workman being resolved to give it several masterly touches, and to represent it as ravenous as possible. It will be set up in Button's coffee house in Covent-Garden, who is directed to shew the way to the Lion's head, and to instruct any young author how to convey his works into the mouth of it with safety and secrecy.

Saturday,

N^o 99 Saturday, July 4.

*Iustum & tenacem propositi virum,
Non civium ardor prava jubentium,
Non vultus instantis tyranni
Mente quatit solidâ; neque auster
Dux inquieti turbidus Adriæ,
Nec fulminantis magna Jovis manus:
Si fractus illabatur orbis,
Impavidum ferient ruinæ.* Hor. Od. 3. l. 3. v. 1.

P A R A P H R A S E D.

The man resolv'd and steady to his trust,
Inflexible to ill, and obstinately just,
May the rude rabble's insolence despise,
Their senseless clamours, and tumultuous cries:
The tyrant's fierceness he beguiles,
And the stern brow, and the harsh voice defies,
And with superior greatness smiles.

Not the rough whirlwind, that deforms
Adria's black gulph, and vexes it with storms,
The stubborn virtue of his soul can move;

Not the red arm of angry Jove,
That flings the thunder from the sky,
And gives it rage to roar, and strength to fly.

Shou'd the whole frame of nature round him break,
In ruin and confusion hurl'd,
He unconcern'd, would hear the mighty crack,
And stand secure amidst a falling world. ANON.

THere is no virtue so truly great and godlike as justice. Most of the other virtues are the virtues of created beings, or accommodated to our nature as we are men. Justice is that which is practised by God himself, and to be practised in its perfection by none but him. Omniscience and omnipotence are requisite for the full exertion of it. The one to discover every degree degree of uprightness or iniquity in thoughts, words and actions. The other, to measure out and impart suitable rewards and punishments.

As to be perfectly just is an attribute in the divine nature, to be so to the utmost of our abilities is the glory of a man. Such an one who has the publick administration in his hands, acts like the representative of his Maker, in recompensing the virtuous, and punishing the offender. By the extirpating of a criminal he averts the judgments of heaven, when ready to fall upon an impious people; or as my friend Cato expresses it much better in a sentiment conformable to his character,

When by just vengeance impious mortals perish,
The Gods behold their punishment with pleasure,
And lay th'uplifted thunderbolt aside.

When a nation once loses its regard to justice; when they do not look upon it as something venerable, holy and inviolable; when any of them dare presume to lessen, affront or terrify those who have the distribution of it in their hands; when a judge is capable of being influenced by any thing but law, or a cause may be recommended by any thing that is foreign to its own merits, we may venture to pronounce that such a nation is hastening to its ruin.

For this reason the best law that has ever past in our days is that which continues our judges in their post during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who in ill times might, by an undue influence over them, trouble and pervert the course of justice. I dare say the extraordinary person who is now posted in the chief station of the law, would have been the same had that act never past; but it is a great satisfaction to all honest men, that while we see the greatest ornament of the profession in its highest post, we are sure he cannot hurt himself by that assiduous, regular and impartial administration of justice, for which he is so universally celebrated by the whole kingdom. Such men are to be reckoned among the greatest national blessings, and should have that honour paid them whilst they are yet living, which will not fail to crown their memory when dead.

I always rejoice when I see a tribunal filled with a man of an upright and inflexible temper, who in the execution of his country's laws can overcome all private fear, resentment, sollicitation, and even pity itself. Whatever passion enters into a sentence or decision, so far will there be in it a tincture of injustice. In short, justice discards party, friendship, kindred, and is therefore always represented as blind, that we may suppose her thoughts are wholly intent on the equity of a cause, without being diverted or prejudiced by objects foreign to it.

I shall conclude this paper with a Persian story, which is very suitable to my present subject. It will not a little please the reader, if he has the same taste of it which I myself have.

As one of the Sultans lay encamped on the plains of Avala, a certain great man of the army entered by force into a peasant's house, and finding his wife very handsome, turned the good man out of his dwelling and went to bed to her. The peasant complained the next morning to the Sultan, and desired redress; but was not able to point out the criminal. The Emperor, who was very much incensed at the injury done to the poor man, told him that probably the offender might give his wife another visit, and if he did, commanded him immediately to repair to his tent and acquaint him with it. Accordingly within two or three days the officer entered again the peasant's house, and turned the owner out of doors; who thereupon applied himself to the imperial tent, as he was ordered. The Sultan went in person, with his guards, to the poor man's house, where he arrived about midnight. As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the Sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. This was immediately executed, and the corps laid out upon the floor by the Emperor's command. He then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body. The Sultan approaching it looked about the face, and immediately fell upon his knees in prayer. Upon his rising up, he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever

whatever food he had in his house. The peasant brought out a good deal of coarse fare, of which the Emperor eat very heartily. The peasant seeing him in good humour, presumed to ask of him, why he had ordered the flambeaux to be put out before he had commanded the adulterer should be slain? Why, upon their being lighted again, he looked upon the face of the dead body, and fell down in prayer? and why, after this, he had ordered meat to be set before him, of which he now eat so heartily? The Sultan being willing to gratify the curiosity of his host, answered him in this manner, ‘ Upon hearing the greatness of the offence which had been committed by one of the army, I had reason to think it might have been one of my own sons, for who else would have been so audacious and presuming? I gave orders therefore for the lights to be extinguished, that I might not be led astray by partiality or compassion, from doing justice on the criminal. Upon the lighting the flambeaux a second time, I looked upon the face of the dead person, and, to my unspeakable joy, found it was not my son. It was for this reason that I immediately fell upon my knees and gave thanks to God. As for my eating heartily of the food you have set before me, you will cease to wonder at it, when you know that the great anxiety of mind I have been in, upon this occasion, since the first complaints you brought me, has hindered my eating any thing from that time until this very moment.

N^o 100

Monday, July 6.

*Hoc vos præcipuè, niveæ, decet; hoc ubi vidi,
Oscula ferre humero, quâ patet, usque libet.*

Ovid. Ars Amator. l. 3. v. 309.

If snowy-white your neck, you still should wear
That, and the shoulder of the left arm, bare;
Such sights ne'er fail to fire my am'rous heart,
And make me pant to kiss the naked part.

CONGREVE.

There is a certain female ornament by some called a tucker, and by others the neck-piece, being a slip of fine linen or muslin that used to run in a small kind of ruffle round the uppermost verge of the womens stays, and by that means covered a great part of the shoulders and bosom. Having thus given a definition, or rather description of the tucker, I must take notice that our Ladies have of late thrown aside this fig-leaf, and exposed in its primitive nakedness that gentle swelling of the breast which it was used to conceal. What their design by it is, they themselves best know.

I observed this as I was sitting the other day by a famous she-visitant at my Lady Lizard's, when accidentally as I was looking upon her face, letting my sight fall into her bosom, I was surprized with beauties which I never before discovered, and do not know where my eye would have run, if I had not immediately checked it. The Lady herself could not forbear blushing, when she observed by my looks that she had made her neck too beautiful and glaring an object, even for a man of my character and gravity. I could scarce forbear making use of my hand to cover so unseemly a sight.

If we survey the pictures of our great-grand-mothers in Queen Elizabeth's time, we see them clothed down to the very wrists, and up to the very chin. The hands and face were the only samples they gave of their beautiful persons. The following age of females made larger discoveries of their complection. They first of all tuck'd up their garments to the elbow, and notwithstanding the tenderness of the sex, were content, for the information of mankind, to expose their arms to the coldness of the air, and injuries of the weather. This artifice hath succeeded to their wishes, and betrayed many to their arms, who might have escaped them had they been still concealed.
of

About the same time the ladies considering that the neck was a very modest part in a human body, they freed it from those yokes, I mean those monstrous linen ruffs, in which the simplicity of their grand-mothers had inclosed it. In proportion as the age refined, the dress still sunk lower, so that when we now say a woman has a handsom neck, we reckon into it many of the adjacent parts. The disuse of the tucker has still enlarged it, insomuch that the neck of a fine woman at present takes in almost half the body.

Since the female neck thus grows upon us, and the ladies seem disposed to discover themselves to us more and more, I would fain have them tell us once for all how far they intend to go, and whether they have yet determined among themselves where to make a stop.

For my own part, their necks, as they call them, are no more than busts of alabaster in my eye. I can look upon with as much coldness as this line of Mr. Waller represents in the object itself. But my fair readers ought to consider that all their beholders are not NESTORS. Every man is not sufficiently qualified with age and philosophy to be an indifferent spectator of such allurements. The eyes of young men are curious and penetrating, their imaginations of a roving nature, and their passion under no discipline or restraint. I am in pain for a woman of rank, when I see her thus exposing herself to the regard of every impudent staring fellow. How can she expect that her quality can defend her, when she gives such provocation? I could not but observe last winter, that upon the disuse of the neck-piece (the ladies will pardon me, if it is not the fashionable term of art) the whole tribe of Oglers gave their eyes a new determination, and stared the fair sex in the neck rather than in the face. To prevent these saucy familiar glances, I would intreat my gentle readers to sew on their tuckers again, to retrieve the modesty of their characters, and not to imitate the nakedness but the innocence of their mother Eve.

The yielding marble of a snowy breast.

What most troubles and indeed surprises me in this particular, I have observed that the leaders in this fashion were most of them married women. What their design can be in making themselves bare I cannot possibly imagine. No body exposes wares that are appropriated. When the bird is taken, the snare ought to be removed. It was a remarkable circumstance in the institution of the severe Lycurgus: As that great lawgiver knew that the wealth and strength of a republick consisted in the multitude of citizens, he did all he could to encourage marriage: In order to it he prescribed a certain loose dress for the Spartan maids, in which there were several artificial rents and openings, that upon their putting themselves in motion discovered several limbs of the body to the beholders. Such were the baits and temptations made use of, by that wise law-giver, to incline the young men of his age to marriage. But when the maid was once sped, she was not suffered to tantalize the male part of the commonwealth. Her garments were closed up, and stitched together with the greatest care imaginable. The shape of her limbs and complexion of her body had gained their ends, and were ever after to be concealed from the notice of the publick.

I shall conclude this discourse of the tucker with a moral which I have taught upon all occasions, and shall still continue to inculcate into my female readers; namely, that nothing bestows so much beauty on a woman as modesty. This is a maxim laid down by Ovid himself, the greatest master in the art of love. He observes upon it, that Venus pleases most when she appears (femi-reducta) in a figure withdrawing herself from the eye of the beholder. It is very probable he had in his thoughts the statue which we see in the Venus de Medicis, where where she is represented in such a shy retiring posture, and covers her bosom with one of her hands. In short, modesty gives the maid greater beauty than even the bloom of youth, it bestows on the wife the dignity of a matron, and reinstates the widow in her virginity.

N^o 101 Tuesday, July 7.

Tros Tyriusve mihi nullo discrimine habetur.

Virg. Æn. 1. v. 578.

Trojan and Tyrian differ but in name ;
Both to my favour have an equal claim.

THIS being the great day of Thanksgiving for the Peace, I shall present my reader with a couple of letters that are the fruits of it. They are written by a gentleman who has taken this opportunity to see France, and has given his friends in England a general account of what he has there met with, in several epistles. Those which follow were put into my hands with liberty to make them publick, and I question not but my reader will think himself obliged to me for so doing.

S I R,

‘ Since I had the happiness to see you last, I have ‘ encountered as many misfortunes as a knight
‘ errant. I had a fall into the water at Calais, and since ‘ that several bruises upon the land, lame post-horses
‘ by day, and hard beds at night, with many other ‘ dismal adventures,

Quorum animus meminisse horret luctuque refugit.

Virg. Æn. 2. v. 12.

At which my memory with grief recoils.

‘ My arrival at Paris was at first no less uncomfortable,
‘ where I could not see a face nor hear a word that ‘ I ever met with before ; so that my most agreeable ‘ companions

‘ companions have been statues and pictures, which are ‘ many of them very extraordinary; but what particu‘ larly recommends them to me is, that they do not ‘ speak French, and have a very good quality, rarely to ‘ be met with in this country, of not being too talkative.

‘ I am settled for some time at Paris. Since my ‘ being here I have made the tour of all the king’s ‘ palaces, which has been I think the pleasantest part ‘ of my life. I could not believe it was in the power
‘ of art to furnish out such a multitude of noble scenes
‘ as I there met with, or that so many delightful prof-‘ pects could lie within the compass of a man’s imagi‘ nation. There is every thing done that can be ‘ expected from a prince who removes mountains, turns
‘ the course of rivers, raises woods in a day’s time, and ‘ plants a village or town on such a particular spot of ‘ ground only for the bettering of a view. One would ‘ wonder to see how many tricks he has made the water
‘ play for his diversion. It turns itself into pyramids, ‘ triumphal arches, glass bottles, imitates a fire-work,
‘ rises in a mist, or tells a story out of Æsop.

‘ I do not believe, as good a poet as you are, that ‘ you can make finer landships than those about the ‘ king’s houses, or with all your descriptions raise a ‘ more magnificent palace than Versailles. I am how‘ ever so singular as to prefer Fontaine-bleau to all the ‘ rest. It is situated among rocks and woods, that give ‘ you a fine variety of savage prospects. The king
‘ has humoured the genius of the place, and only made ‘ use of so much art as is necessary to help and regulate ‘ nature, without reforming her too much. The cas‘ cades seem to break through the clefts and cracks of ‘ rocks that are covered over with moss, and look as if ‘ they were piled upon one another by accident. There ‘ is an artificial wildness in the meadows, walks, and ‘ canals; and the garden, instead of a wall, is fenced
‘ on the lower end by a natural mound of rock-work
‘ that strikes the eye very agreeably. For my part, I ‘ think there is something more charming in these rude ‘ heaps of stone than in so many statues, and would
‘ as soon see a river winding through woods and mea‘ dows, as when it is tossed up in so many whimsical ‘ figures

figures at Versailles. To pass from works of nature to those of art. In my opinion, the pleasantest part of Versailles is the gallery. Every one sees on each side of it something that will be sure to please him. For one of them commands a view of the finest garden in the world, and the other is wainscotted with looking-glasses. The history of the present king until the year 16 is painted on the roof by le Brun, so that his majesty has actions enough by him to furnish another gallery much longer than the present.

The painter has represented his most christian majesty under the figure of Jupiter, throwing thunderbolts all about the cieling, and striking terror into the Danube and Rhine, that lie astonished and blasted with lightning above the cornice.

But what makes all these shows the more agreeable is, the great kindness and affability that is shown to strangers. If the French do not excel the English in all the arts of humanity, they do at least in the outward expressions of it. And upon this, as well as other accounts, though I believe the English are a much wiser nation, the French are undoubtedly much more happy. Their old men in particular are, I believe, the most agreeable in the world. An antediluvian could not have more life and briskness in him at threescore and ten: For that fire and levity which makes the young ones scarce conversable, when a little wasted and tempered by years, makes a very pleasant and gay old age. Besides, this national fault of being so very talkative looks natural and graceful in one that has grey hairs to countenance it. The mentioning this fault in the French must put me in mind to finish my letter, lest you think me already too much infected by their conversation; but I must desire you to consider, that travelling does in this respect lay a little claim to the privilege of old age.

I am, Sir, &c.

S I R,

Blois, May 15, N. S.

I Cannot pretend to trouble you with any news from this place, where the only advantage I have, besides getting the language, is, to see the manners and tempers of the people, which I believe may be better learnt here than in courts and greater cities, where artifice and disguise are more in fashion.

I have already seen, as I informed you in my last, all the king's palaces, and have now seen a great part of the country. I never thought there had been in the world such an excessive magnificence or poverty as I have met with in both together. One can scarce conceive the pomp that appears in every thing about the king; but at the same time it makes half his subjects go barefoot. The people are, however, the happiest in the world, and enjoy, from the benefit of their climate and natural constitution, such a perpetual gladness of heart and easiness of temper as even liberty and plenty cannot bestow on those of other nations. It is not in the power of want or slavery to make them miserable. There is nothing to be met with in the country, but mirth and poverty. Every one sings, laughs and starves. Their conversation is generally agreeable; for if they have any wit or sense, they are sure to show it. They never mend upon a second meeting, but use all the freedom and familiarity at first sight, that a long intimacy or abundance of wine can scarce draw from an Englishman. Their women are perfect mistresses in this art of showing themselves to the best advantage. They are always gay and sprightly, and set off the worst faces in Europe with the best airs. Every one knows how to give herself as charming a look and posture as Sir Godfrey Kneller could draw her in. I cannot end my letter without observing that from what I have already seen of the world, I cannot but set a particular mark of distinction upon those who abound most in the virtues of their nation, and least with its imperfections. When therefore I see the good sense of an Englishman in its highest perfection without

‘ without any mixture of the spleen, I hope you will ‘ excuse me, if I admire the character, and am ambitious
 ‘ of subscribing myself,

S I R, yours, &c.

N^o 102

Wednesday, July 8.

—— Natos ad flumina primum

Deferimus, sævoque gelu duramus & undis.

Virg. Æn. 9. v. 603.

Strong from the cradle, of a sturdy brood,
 We bear our new-born infants to the flood;
 There bath'd amid the stream, our boys we hold,
 With winter harden'd, and inur'd to cold.

DRYDEN.

I Am always beating about in my thoughts for something that may turn to the benefit of my dear countrymen. The present season of the year having put most of them in slight summer-suits, has turned my speculations to a subject that concerns every one who is sensible of cold or heat, which I believe takes in the greatest part of my readers.

There is nothing in nature more inconstant than the British climate, if we except the humour of its inhabitants. We have frequently in one day all the seasons of the year. I have shivered in the Dog-days, and been forced to throw off my coat in January. I have gone to bed in August, and rose in December. Summer has often caught me in my Drap de Berry, and winter in my Doily suit.

I remember a very whimsical fellow (commonly known by the name of Posture-master) in king Charles the second's reign, who was the plague of all the taylor's about town. He would often send for one of them to take measure of him, but would so contrive it as to have a most immoderate rising in one of his shoulders. When the clothes were brought home and tried upon him, the deformity was removed into the other shoulder. Upon which the taylor begged pardon for the mistake, and mended it as fast as he could, but upon a third trial found him a straight-shouldered man as one would desire to see, but a little unfortunate in a humpt back. In short, this wandering tumour puzzled all the workmen about town, who found it impossible to accommodate so changeable a customer. My reader will apply this to any one who would adapt a suit to a season of our English climate.

After this short descant on the uncertainty of our English weather, I come to my moral.

A man should take care that his body be not too soft for his climate; but rather, if possible, harden and season himself beyond the degree of cold wherein he lives. Daily experience teaches us how we may inure ourselves by custom to bear the extremities of weather without injury. The inhabitants of Nova Zembla go naked, without complaining of the bleakness of the air in which they are born, as the armies of the northern nations keep the field all winter. The softest of our British ladies expose their arms and necks to the open air, which the men could not do without catching cold, for want of being accustomed to it. The whole body by the same means might contract the same firmness and temper. The Scythian that was asked how it was possible for the inhabitants of his frozen climate to go naked, replied, "Because we are all over face." Mr. Locke advises parents to have their children's feet wash'd every morning in cold water, which might probably prolong multitudes of lives.

I very believe a cold bath would be one of the most healthful exercises in the world, were it made use of in the education of youth. It would make their bodies more than proof to the injuries of the air and weather. It would be somewhat like what the poets tell us of Achilles, whom his mother is said to have dipped, when he was a child, in the river Styx. The story adds, that this made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which his mother held in her hand during this immersion, and which by that means lost

lost the benefit of these hardening waters. Our common practice runs in a quite contrary method. We are perpetually softening ourselves by good fires and warm clothes. The air within our rooms has generally two or three degrees more of heat in it than the air without doors.

Crassus is an old lethargick valetudinarian. For these twenty years last past he has been clothed in frize of the same colour and of the same piece. He fancies he should catch his death in any other kind of manufacture; and though his avarice would incline him to wear it until it was theadbare, he dares not do it lest he should take cold when the nap is off. He could no more live without his frize-coat than without his skin. It is not indeed so properly his coat as what the anatomists call one of the Integuments of the body.

How different an old man is Crassus from myself? It is indeed the particular distinction of the Ironsides to be robust and hardy, to defy the cold and rain, and let the weather do its worst. My father lived until a hundred without a cough; and we have a tradition in the family, that my grandfather used to throw off his hat and go open-breasted after fourscore. As for myself, they used to sowse me over head and ears in water when I was a boy, so that I am now looked upon as one of the most case-harden'd of the whole family of the Ironsides. In short, I have been so plunged in water and inured to the cold, that I regard myself as a piece of true-tempered Steel, and can say with the above-mentioned Scythian, that I am face, or if my enemies please, forehead, all over.

N^o 103

Thursday, July 9.

*Dum flammæ Jovis, & sonitus imitatur olympi.*Virg. Æn. 6. v. 586.

With mimick thunder impiously he plays,
And darts the artificial lightning's blaze.

I Am considering how most of the great phænomena or appearances in nature, have been imitated by the art of man. Thunder is grown a common drug among the chymists. Lightning may be bought by the pound. If a man has occasion for a lambent flame, you have whole sheets of it in a handful of phosphor. Showers of rain are to be met with in every water-work; and we are informed, that some years ago the virtuosos of France covered a little vault with artificial snow, which they made to fall above an hour together for the entertainment of his present majesty.

I am led into this train of thinking by the noble fire-work that was exhibited last night upon the Thames. You might there see a little sky filled with innumerable blazing stars and meteors. Nothing could be more astonishing than the pillars of flame, clouds of smoke, and multitudes of stars mingled together in such an agreeable confusion. Every rocket ended in a constellation, and strow'd the air with such a shower of silver spangles, as opened and enlightened the whole scene from time to time. It put me in mind of the lines in OEdipus,

Why from the bleeding womb of monstrous night
Burst forth such myriads of abortive stars?

In short, the artist did his part to admiration, and was so encompassed with fire and smoke, that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been safe in such a situation.

I was in company with two or three fanciful friends during this whole show. One of them being a critick, that is, a man who on all occasions is more attentive to what is wanting than what is present, begun to exert his talent upon the several objects we had before us. I am mightily pleased, says he, with that burning cypher. There is no matter in the world so proper to write with as wild-fire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. But as for your cardinal virtues, I do not care for seeing them in such combustible figures. Who can imagine Chastity with a body of fire, or Temperance in a flame? Justice indeed may be furnished out of this element as far as her sword goes, and courage may be all over one continued blaze, if the artist pleases.

Our companion observing that we laughed at this unseasonable severity, let drop the critick, and proposed a subject for a fire-work, which he thought would be very amusing, if executed by so able an artist as he who was at that time entertaining us. The plan he mentioned was a scene in Milton. He would have a large piece of machinery represent the Pan-dæmonium, where

—————from the arched roof
Pendent by subtle magic, many a row
Of starry lamps, and blazing cressets, fed
With Naphna and Asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky—————

This might be finely represented by several illuminations disposed in a great frame of wood, with ten thousand beautiful exhalations of fire, which men versed in this art know very well how to raise. The evil spirits at the same time might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, and employ all the tricks of art to terrify and surprise the spectator.

We were well enough pleased with this start of thought, but fancied there was something in it too serious, and perhaps too horrid, to be put in execution.

Upon this a friend of mine gave us an account of a fire-work described, if I am not mistaken, by Strada. A prince of Italy, it seems, entertained his mistress with it upon a great lake. In the midst of this lake was a huge

huge floating mountain made by art. The mountain represented Ætna, being bored through the top with a monstrous orifice. Upon a signal given the eruption began. Fire and smoke, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance for some time. On a sudden there was heard a most dreadful rumbling noise within the entrails of the machine. After which the mountain burst, and discovered a vast cavity in that side which faced the prince and his court. Within this hollow was Vulcan's shop full of fire and clock-work. A column of blue flame issued out incessantly from the forge. Vulcan was employed in hammering out thunderbolts, that every now and then flew up from the anvil with dreadful cracks and flashes. Venus stood by him in a figure of the brightest fire, with numberless cupids on all sides of her, that shot out volleys of burning arrows. Before her was an altar with hearts of fire flaming on it. I have forgot several other particulars no less curious, and have only mentioned these to shew that there may be a sort of fable or design in a fire-work which may give an additional beauty to those surprising objects.

I seldom see any thing that raises wonder in me which does not give my thoughts a turn that makes my heart the better for it. As I was lying in my bed, and ruminating on what I have seen, I could not forbear reflecting on the insignificancy of human art, when set in comparison with the designs of providence. In the pursuit of this thought I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing-star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Many of my readers saw that in the year 1680, and if they are not mathematicians, will be amazed to hear that it travelled in a much greater degree of swiftness than a cannon-ball, and drew after it a tail of fire that was fourscore millions of miles in length. What an amazing thought is it to consider this stupendous body traversing the immensity of the creation with such a rapidity, and at the same time wheeling about in that line which the Almighty has prescribed for it? that it should move in such inconceivable fury and combustion, and at the same time with such an exact regularity? How spacious must

must the universe be that gives such bodies as these their full play, without suffering the least disorder or confusion by it! What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can look into this great theatre of nature, and see myriads of such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of Ether, and running their appointed courses? Our eyes may hereafter be strong enough to command this magnificent prospect, and our understandings able to find out the several uses of these great parts of the universe. In the mean time they are very proper objects for our imaginations to contemplate, that we may form more exalted notions of infinite wisdom and power, and learn to think humbly of ourselves, and of all the little works of human invention.

N^o 104 Friday, July 10.

Quæ è longinquo magis placent.

Tacit.

The farther fetch'd, the more they please.

ON Tuesday last I published two letters written by a Gentleman in his travels. As they were applauded by my best readers, I shall this day publish two more from the same hand. The first of them contains a matter of fact which is very curious, and may deserve the attention of those who are versed in our British antiquities.

S I R,

Blois, May 15, N. S.

‘ BECAUSE I am at present out of the road of news,
 ‘ I shall send you a story that was lately given me
 ‘ by a Gentleman of this country, who is descended ‘ from one of the persons concerned in the relation,
 ‘ and very inquisitive to know if there be any of the ‘ family now in England.

‘ I shall only premise to it, that this story is preserved
 ‘ with great care among the writings of this Gentle‘ man’s

‘ man’s family, and that it has been given to two or ‘ three of our English nobility, when they were in these ‘ parts, who could not return any satisfactory answer
‘ to the Gentleman, whether there be any of that fa‘ mily now remaining in Great-Britain.

‘ In the reign of King John there lived a Nobleman ‘ called John de Sigonia, Lord of that place in Touraine, ‘ his brothers were Philip and Briant. Briant, when ‘ very young, was made one of the French King’s pages,
‘ and served him in that quality when he was taken pri‘ soner by the English. The King of England chanced ‘ to see the youth, and being much pleased with his ‘ person and behaviour, begged him of the King, his ‘ prisoner. It happened, some years after this, that ‘ John the other brother, who, in the course of the war,
‘ had raised himself to a considerable post in the French ‘ army, was taken prisoner by Briant, who at that ‘ time was an officer in the King of England’s guards.
‘ Briant knew nothing of his brother, and being natu‘ rally of an haughty temper, treated him very info‘ lently, and more like a criminal than a prisoner of ‘ war. This John resented so highly, that he chal‘ lenged him to a single combat. The challenge was ‘ accepted, and time and place assigned them by the ‘ King’s appointment. Both appeared on the day pre‘ fixed, and entered the lists compleatly armed amidst a ‘ great multitude of spectators. Their first encounters
‘ were very furious, and the success equal on both sides;
‘ until after some toil and bloodshed they were parted by ‘ their seconds to fetch breath, and prepare themselves
‘ afresh for the combat. Briant, in the mean time, ‘ had cast his eye upon his brother’s escutcheon, which ‘ he saw agree in all points with his own. I need not ‘ tell you after this, with what joy and surprise the ‘ story ends. King Edward, who knew all the particu‘ lars of it, as a mark of his esteem, gave to each of ‘ them, by the King of France’s consent, the following ‘ coat of arms, which I will send you in the original ‘ language, not being herald enough to blazon it in ‘ English.

“ Le Roi d’Angleterre par permission du Roi de France, “ pour perpetuelle memoire de leurs grands faits d’armes & “ fidelité envers leurs Rois, leur donna par Ampliation à “ leurs Armes en une croix d’argent Cantonée de quatre “ Coquilles d’or en Champ de Sable, qu’ils avoient Aupa- “ ravant, un endenteuse faite en façons de Croix de “ guëulle inserée au dedans de la ditte croix d’argent & par
 “ le milieu d’icelle qui est participation des deux Croix que
 “ portent les dits Rois en la guerre.”

‘ I am afraid, by this time, you begin to wonder that ‘ I should send you for news a tale of three or four ‘ hundred years old; and I dare say never thought,
 ‘ when you desired me to write to you, that I should ‘ trouble you with a story of King John, especially at a ‘ time, when there is a Monarch on the French throne
 ‘ that furnishes discourse for all Europe. But I confess
 ‘ I am the more fond of the relation, because it brings ‘ to mind the noble exploits of our own countrymen:
 ‘ Though at the same time, I must own it is not so ‘ much the vanity of an Englishman which puts me
 ‘ upon writing it, as that I have of taking any occasion
 ‘ to subscribe myself,

S I R, yours, &c.

S I R,

Blois, May 20, N. S.

‘ I Am extremely obliged to you for your last kind ‘ letter, which was the only English that had been ‘ spoken to me in some months together, for I am at ‘ present forced to think the absence of my countrymen
 ‘ my good fortune:

Votum in amante novum! vellem quod amatur abesset.

Ovid. Met. l. 3. v. 468.

Strange wish, to harbour in a lover’s breast!

I wish That absent, which I love the best.

‘ This is an advantage that I could not have hoped for,
 ‘ had I stayed near the French court, though I must ‘ confess I would not but have seen it, because I believe ‘ it shewed me some of the finest places and of the great‘ est persons in the world. One cannot hear a name ‘ mentioned

‘ mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece
‘ of a gazette, nor see a man that has not signalized ‘ himself in a battle. One would fancy one’s self to be ‘ in the enchanted palaces of a romance; one meets ‘ with so many heroes, and finds something so like scenes
‘ of magick in the gardens, statues, and water-works.
‘ I am ashamed that I am not able to make a quicker ‘ progress through the French tongue, because I be‘ lieve it is impossible for a learner of a language to ‘ find in any nation such advantages as in this, where ‘ every body is so very courteous and so very talkative.
‘ They always take care to make a noise as long as ‘ they are in company, and are as loud any hour in ‘ the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight.
‘ By what I have seen, there is more mirth in the French ‘ conversation, and more wit in the English. You ‘ abound more in jests, but they in laughter. Their ‘ language is indeed extremely proper to tattle in, it ‘ is made up of so much repetition and compliment.
‘ One may know a foreigner by his answering only No
‘ or Yes to a question, which a Frenchman generally ‘ makes a sentence of. They have a set of ceremonious ‘ phrases that run through all ranks and degrees among ‘ them. Nothing is more common than to hear a shop‘ keeper desiring his neighbour to have the goodness
‘ to tell him what it is o’clock, or a couple of cobblers
‘ that are extremely glad of the honour of seeing one ‘ another.

‘ The face of the whole country where I now am,
‘ is at this season pleasant beyond imagination. I can‘ not but fancy the birds of this place, as well as the ‘ men, a great deal merrier than those of our own na‘ tion. I am sure the French year has got the start of ‘ ours more in the works of nature than in the new ‘ stile. I have past one March in my life without be‘ ing ruffled with the winds, and one April without ‘ being washed with rains.

I am, Sir, yours.

Saturday.

N^o 105 Saturday, July 11.

Quod neque in Armeniis tigres fecere latebris :

Perdere nec fœtus ausa Leæna suos.

At teneræ faciunt, sed non impunè, puellæ ;

Sæpe, suos utero quæ necat, ipsa perit.

Ovid. Amor. l. 2. Eleg. 14. v. 35.

The tigresses, that haunt th' Armenian wood,
Will spare their proper young, tho' pinch'd for food ;
Nor will the Lybian lionesses slay
Their whelps : but women are more fierce than they,
More barbarous to the tender fruit they bear ;
Nor nature's call, tho' loud she cries, will hear.
But righteous vengeance oft their crimes pursues,
And they are lost themselves, who would their children lose. ANON.

There was no part of the show on the Thanksgiving Day that so much pleased and affected me as the little boys and girls who were ranged with so much order and decency in that part of the Strand which reaches from the May-pole to Exeter-Change. Such a numerous and innocent multitude, clothed in the charity of their benefactors, was a spectacle pleasing both to God and man, and a more beautiful expression of joy and thanksgiving than could have been exhibited by all the pomps of a Roman triumph. Never did a more full and unspotted chorus of human creatures join together in a hymn of devotion. The care and tenderness which appeared in the looks of their several instructors, who were disposed among this little helpless people, could not forbear touching every heart that had any sentiments of humanity.

I am very sorry that her Majesty did not see this assembly of objects, so proper to excite that charity and compassion which she bears to all who stand in need of it, though at the same time I question not but her royal bounty

bounty will extend itself to them. A charity bestowed on the education of so many of her young subjects, has more merit in it than a thousand pensions to those of a higher fortune who are in greater stations in life.

I have always looked on this institution of Charity-Schools, which, of late years, has so universally prevailed through the whole nation, as the glory of the age we live in, and the most proper means that can be made use of to recover it out of its present degeneracy and depravation of manners. It seems to promise us an honest and virtuous posterity: There will be few in the next generation who will not at least be able to write and read, and have not had an early tincture of religion. It is therefore to be hoped that the several persons of wealth and quality, who made their procession through the members of these new-erected seminaries, will not regard them only as an empty spectacle, or the materials of a fine show, but contribute to their maintenance and increase. For my part, I can scarce forbear looking on the astonishing victories our arms have been crowned with, to be in some measure the blessings returned upon that national charity which has been so conspicuous of late; and that the great successes of the last war, for which we lately offered up our thanks, were in some measure occasioned by the several objects which then stood before us.

Since I am upon this subject, I shall mention a piece of charity which has not been yet exerted among us, and which deserves our attention the more, because it is practised by most of the nations about us. I mean a provision for foundlings, or for those children who through want of such a provision are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents. One does not know how to speak on such a subject without horror: But what multitudes of infants have been made away by those who brought them into the world, and were afterwards either ashamed or unable to provide for them.

There is scarce an assizes where some unhappy wretch is not executed for the murder of a child. And how many more of these monsters of inhumanity may we suppose to be wholly undiscovered, or cleared for want of legal evidence? Not to mention those, who by unnatural

unnatural practices do in some measure defeat the intentions of providence, and destroy their conceptions even before they see the light. In all these the guilt is equal, though the punishment is not so. But to pass by the greatness of the crime, (which is not to be expressed by words) if we only consider it as it robs the commonwealth of its full number of citizens, it certainly deserves the utmost application and wisdom of a people to prevent it.

It is certain, that which generally betrays these profligate women into it, and overcomes the tenderness which is natural to them on other occasions, is the fear of shame, or their inability to support those whom they give life to. I shall therefore shew how this evil is prevented in other countries, as I have learned from those who have been conversant in the several great cities of Europe.

There are at Paris, Madrid, Lisbon, Rome, and many other large towns, great hospitals built like our colleges. In the walls of these hospitals are placed machines, in the shape of large lanthorns, with a little door in the side of them turned towards the street, and a bell hanging by them. The child is deposited in this lanthorn, which is immediately turned about into the inside of the hospital. The person who conveys the child, rings the bell and leaves it there, upon which the proper officer comes and receives it without making further inquiries. The parent or her friend, who lays the child there, generally leaves a note with it, declaring whether it be yet christened, the name it should be called by, the particular marks upon it, and the like.

It often happens that the parent leaves a note for the maintenance and education of the child, or takes it out after it has been some years in the hospital. Nay, it has been known that the father has afterwards owned the young foundling for his son, or left his estate to him. This is certain, that many are by this means preserved, and do signal services to their country, who without such a provision might have perished as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought upon their guilty parents the like destruction.

This

This I think is a subject that deserves our most serious consideration, for which reason I hope I shall not be thought impertinent in laying it before my readers.

N^o 106

Monday, July 13.

Quod latet arcanâ, non Enarrabile, fibrâ.

Perf. Sat. 5. v. 29.

The deep recesses of the human breast.

AS I was making up my Monday's provision for the publick, I received the following letter, which being a better entertainment than any I can furnish out myself, I shall set it before the reader, and desire him to fall on without farther ceremony.

S I R,

‘ YOur two kinsmen and predecessors of immortal
 ‘ memory, were very famous for their dreams
 ‘ and visions, and contrary to all other authors never ‘ pleased their readers more than when they were nod‘ ding. Now it is observed, that the Second-sight gene‘ rally runs in the blood; and, Sir, we are in hopes that ‘ you yourself, like the rest of your family, may at ‘ length prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of vi‘ sions. In the mean while I beg leave to make you a ‘ present of a dream, which may serve to lull your ‘ readers until such time as you yourself shall think fit
 ‘ to gratify the publick with any of your nocturnal ‘ discoveries.

‘ You must understand, Sir, I had yesterday been ‘ reading and ruminating upon that passage where Mo-‘ mus is said to have found fault with the make of a ‘ man, because he had not a window in his breast.
 ‘ The moral of this story is very obvious, and means no
 ‘ more than that the heart of man is so full of wiles
 ‘ and artifices, treachery and deceit, that there is no ‘ guessing at what he is from his speeches and outward ‘ appear-

appearances. I was immediately reflecting how happy each of the sexes would be, if there was a window in the breast of every one that makes or receives love. What protestations and perjuries would be saved on the one side, what hypocrisy and dissimulation on the other? I am myself very far gone in this passion for Aurelia, a woman of an unsearchable heart. I would give the world to know the secrets of it, and particularly whether I am really in her good graces, or if not, who is the happy person.

I fell asleep in this agreeable reverie, when on a sudden methought Aurelia lay by my side. I was placed by her in the posture of Milton's Adam, and with looks of cordial love hung over her enamoured." As I cast my eye upon her bosom, it appeared to be all of crystal, and so wonderfully transparent, that I saw every thought in her heart. The first images I discovered in it were fans, silk, ribbands, laces, and many other gewgaws, which lay so thick together, that the whole heart was nothing else but a toyshop. These all faded away and vanished, when immediately I discerned a long train of coaches and six, equipages and liveries that ran through the heart one after another in a very great hurry for above half an hour together. After this, looking very attentively, I observed the whole space to be filled with a hand of cards, in which I could see distinctly three mattadors. There then followed a quick succession of different scenes. A play-house, a church, a court, a puppet-show, rose up one after another, until at last they all of them gave place to a pair of new shoes, which kept footing in the heart for a whole hour. These were driven off at last by a lap-dog, who was succeeded by a Guinea pig, a squirrel and a monkey. I myself, to my no small joy, brought up the rear of these worthy favourites. I was ravished at being so happily posted and in full possession of the heart: But as I saw the little figure of myself simpering and mightily pleased with its situation, on a sudden the heart methought gave a sigh, in which, as I found afterwards, my little representative vanished; for upon applying my eye, I found my place taken up by an ill-bred, awkward puppy,

‘ puppy, with a money-bag under each arm. This Gen‘ tleman, however, did not keep his station long, before ‘ he yielded it up to a wight as disagreeable as himself,
 ‘ with a white stick in his hand. These three last fi‘ gures repreiented to me in a lively manner the con‘ flicts in Aurelia’s heart between love, avarice and am‘ bition, for we juttled one another out by turns, and ‘ disputed the post for a great while. But at last, to my ‘ unspeakable satisfaction, I saw myself entirely settled
 ‘ in it. I was so transported with my success, that I ‘ could not forbear hugging my dear piece of crystal,
 ‘ when to my unspeakable mortification I awaked, and ‘ found my mistress metamorphosed into a pillow.

‘ This is not the first time I have been thus disap‘ pointed.

‘ O venerable NESTOR, if you have any skill in ‘ dreams, let me know whether I have the same place
 ‘ in the real heart, that I had in the visionary one: To ‘ tell you truly, I am perplexed to death between hope
 ‘ and fear. I was very sanguine until eleven o’clock
 ‘ this morning, when I overheard an unlucky old wo‘ man telling her neighbour that dreams always went ‘ by contraries. I did not indeed before much like the ‘ crystal heart, remembering that confounded simile in ‘ Valentinian, of a maid “ as cold as crystal never to be ‘ thawed.” Besides, I verily believe if I had slept a little ‘ longer, that aukwardwhelp with his money-bags would ‘ certainly have made his second entrance. If you can ‘ tell the fair one’s mind, it will be no small proof of ‘ your art, for I dare say it is more than she herself can ‘ do. Every sentence she speaks is a riddle; all that I ‘ can be certain of is that I am her and your humble servant,

PETER PUZZLE.

Tuesday,

N^o 107 Tuesday, July 14.

—tentanda via est—

Virg. Georg. 3. v. 8.

I'll try the experiment.

I Have lately entertained my reader with two or three letters from a traveller, and may possibly, in some of my future papers, oblige him with more from the same hand. The following one comes from a projector, which is a sort of correspondent as diverting as a traveller; his subject having the same grace of novelty to recommend it, and being equally adapted to the curiosity of the reader. For my own part, I have always had a particular fondness for a project, and may say, without vanity, that I have a pretty tolerable genius that way myself. I could mention some which I have brought to maturity, others which have miscarried, and many more which I have yet by me, and are to take their fate in the world when I see a proper juncture. I had a hand in the land-bank, and was consulted with upon the reformation of manners. I have had several designs upon the Thames and the New-River, not to mention my refinements upon lotteries and insurances, and that never-to-be-forgotten project, which if it had succeeded to my wishes, would have made gold as plentiful in this nation as tin or copper. If my countrymen have not reaped any advantages from these my designs, it was not for want of any good-will towards them. They are obliged to me for my kind intentions as much as if they had taken effect. Projects are of a twofold nature: The first arising from publick-spirited persons, in which number I declare myself: The other proceeding from a regard to our private interest, of which nature is that in the following letter.

S I R,

‘ A Man of your reading knows very well that there ‘ were a set of men in old Rome, called by the ‘ name of Nomenclators, that is in English, men who ‘ call every one by his name. When a great man ‘ stood for any publick office, as that of a tribune, a ‘ consul, or a censor, he had always one of these No-‘ menclators at his elbow, who whispered in his ear the ‘ name of every one he met with, and by that means ‘ enabled him to salute every Roman citizen by his name
‘ when he asked him for his vote. To come to my pur‘ pose: I have with much pains and assiduity qualified ‘ myself for a Nomenclator to this great city, and shall ‘ gladly enter upon my office as soon as I meet with suit‘ able encouragement. I will let myself out by the ‘ week to any curious country Gentleman or foreigner.
‘ If he takes me with him in a coach to the ring, I ‘ will undertake to teach him, in two or three evenings,
‘ the names of the most celebrated persons who frequent
‘ that place. If he plants me by his side in the pit, I ‘ will call over to him, in the same manner, the whole ‘ circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes,
‘ and at the same time point out to him the persons who ‘ ogle them from their respective stations. I need not ‘ tell you that I may be of the same use in any other ‘ publick assembly. Nor do I only profess the teaching ‘ of names, but of things. Upon the sight of a reigning ‘ beauty, I shall mention her admirers, and discover her ‘ gallantries, if they are of publick notoriety. I shall ‘ likewise mark out every toast, the club in which she ‘ was elected, and the number of votes that were on her ‘ side. Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes ‘ a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. The ‘ men too shall be set out in their distinguishing charac‘ ters, and declared whose properties they are. Their ‘ wit, wealth, or good-humour, their persons, stations,
‘ and titles, shall be described at large.

‘ I have a wife who is a Nomenclatress, and will be ‘ ready, on any occasion, to attend the Ladies. She is of ‘ a much more communicative nature than myself, and ‘ is acquainted with all the private history of London and ‘ Westminster,

‘ Westminster, and ten miles round. She has fifty private ‘ amours which no body yet knows any thing of but ‘ herself, and thirty clandestine marriages that have not ‘ been touched by the tip of a tongue. She will wait ‘ upon any Lady at her own lodgings, and talk by the ‘ clock after the rate of three guineas an hour.

‘ N. B. She is a near kinswoman of the author of ‘ the New Atalantis.

‘ I need not recommend to a man of your sagacity,
 ‘ the usefulness of this project, and do therefore beg ‘ your encouragement of it, which will lay a very great ‘ obligation upon your humble servant.’

After this letter from my whimsical correspondent, I shall publish one of a more serious nature, which deserves the utmost attention of the publick, and in particular of such who are lovers of mankind. It is on no less a subject, than that of discovering the Longitude, and deserves a much higher name than that of a project, if our language afforded any such term. But all I can say on this subject will be superfluous, when the reader sees the names of those persons by whom this letter is subscribed, and who have done me the honour to send it me. I must only take notice, that the first of these Gentlemen is the same person who has lately obliged the world with that noble plan, entitled “ A Scheme of the Solar “ System, with the Orbits of the Planets and Comets “ belonging thereto, described from Dr. Halley’s accurate Table of Comets, Philosoph. Transact. N^o 297.
 “ founded on Sir Isaac Newton’s wonderful discoveries,
 “ by William Whiston, M. A.”

TO NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq; at Button’s Coffee-House near Covent-Garden.

S I R,

London, July 11, 1713.

‘ HAVING a discovery of considerable importance to ‘ communicate to the publick, and finding that ‘ you are pleased to concern yourself in any thing that ‘ tends to the common benefit of mankind, we take the ‘ liberty to desire the insertion of this letter into your ‘ GUARDIAN. We expect no other recommendation of it from you, but the allowing of it a place in so useful a paper. Nor do we insist on any protection from you, if what we propose should fall short of what we pretend to; since any disgrace, which in that case must be expected, ought to lie wholly at our own doors, and to be intirely borne by ourselves, which we hope we have provided for by putting our own names to this paper.

It is well known, Sir, to yourself, and to the learned, and trading, and sailing world, that the great defect of the art of navigation is, that a ship at sea has no certain method, in either her eastern or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her Longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, as it can easily be known in any clear day or night, how much she is gone northward or southward: The several methods by lunar eclipses, by those of Jupiter's satellites, by the appulses of the moon to fixed stars, and by the even motions of pendulum clocks and watches, upon how solid foundations soever they are built, still failing in long voyages at sea, when they come to be practised; and leaving the poor sailors frequently to the great inaccuracy of a log-line, or dead reckoning. This defect is so great, and so many ships have been lost by it, and this has been so long and so sensibly known by trading nations, that great rewards are said to be publickly offered for its supply. We are well satisfied, that the discovery we have to make as to this matter, is easily intelligible by all, and ready to be practised at sea as well as at land; that the latitude will thereby be likewise found at the same time; and that with proper charges it may be made as universal as the world shall please; nay, that the longitude and latitude may be generally hereby determined to a greater degree of exactness than the latitude itself is now usually found at sea. So that on all accounts we hope it will appear very worthy the publick consideration. We are ready to disclose it to the world, if we may be assured that no other persons shall be allowed to deprive us of those rewards which the publick shall think fit to bestow for such a discovery; but do not desire actually to receive any benefit of that nature till Sir Isaac Newton himself,

with

• with such other proper persons as shall be chosen to • assist him, have given their opinion in favour of this
 • discovery. If Mr. IRONSIDE pleases so far to oblige
 • the publick as to communicate this proposal to the • world, he will also lay a great obligation on his very humble servants,

WILL. WHISTON,

HUMPHRY DITTON.

N^o 108 Wednesday, July 15.

Abietibus juvenes patriis & montibus æqui.

Virg. Æn. 9. v. 674.

—— Youths, of height and size,
 Like firs that on their mother-mountain rise.

DRYDEN.

I Do not care for burning my fingers in a quarrel, but since I have communicated to the world a plan which has given offence to some gentlemen whom it would not be very safe to disoblige, I must insert the following remonstrance; and at the same time promise those of my correspondents who have drawn this upon themselves to exhibit to the publick any such answer as they shall think proper to make to it.

Mr. GUARDIAN.

• I Was very much troubled to see the two letters
 • which you lately published concerning the short
 • club. You cannot imagine what airs all the little
 • pragmatistical fellows about us have given themselves
 • since the reading of those papers. Every one cocks and
 • struts upon it, and pretends to overlook us who are
 • two foot higher than themselves. I met with one the • other day who was at least three inches above five
 • foot, which you know is the statutable measure of that
 • club. This overgrown runt has struck off his heels,

‘ lowered his fore top, and contracted his figure, that ‘ he might be looked upon as a member of this new ‘ erected society ; nay, so far did his vanity carry him,
‘ that he talked familiarly of Tom Tiptoe, and pretends
‘ to be an intimate acquaintance of Tim Tuck. For my ‘ part, I scorn to speak any thing to the diminution of ‘ these little creatures, and should not have minded them
‘ had they been still shuffled among the crowd. Shrubs
‘ and underwoods look well enough while they grow ‘ within the shades of oaks and cedars ; but when these ‘ pigmies pretend to draw themselves out from the rest ‘ of the world, and form themselves into a body, it is ‘ time for us who are men of figure to look about us.
‘ If the ladies should once take a liking to such a ‘ diminutive race of lovers, we should, in a little time, ‘ see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in ‘ miniature ; daisy roots would grow fashionable diet.
‘ In order therefore to keep our posterity from dwindling,
‘ and fetch down the pride of these aspiring race of ‘ upstarts, we have here instituted a tall club.

‘ As the short club consists of those who are under ‘ five foot, ours is to be composed of such as are above ‘ six. These we look upon as the two extremes and ‘ antagonists of the species : Considering all those as ‘ neuters who fill up the middle space. When a man ‘ rises beyond six foot, he is an Hypermeter, and may ‘ be admitted into the tall club.

‘ We have already chosen thirty members the most ‘ slightly of all her majesty’s subjects. We elected a ‘ president, as many of the ancients did their kings, by ‘ reason of his height, having only confirmed him in ‘ that station above us which nature had given him.
‘ He is a Scotch Highlander, and within an inch of a ‘ show. As for my own part, I am but a sesquipedal ‘ having only six foot and a half in stature. Being the ‘ shortest member of the club, I am appointed secretary.
‘ If you saw us altogether you would take us for the ‘ sons of Anak. Our meetings are held like the old ‘ Gothick parliaments, “sub dio.” in open air ; but we ‘ shall make an interest, if we can, that we may hold ‘ our assemblies in Westminster-Hall when it is not ‘ term-time. I must add to the honour of our club,
‘ that

‘ that it is one of our society who is now finding out
 ‘ the longitude. The device of our publick seal, is a ‘ crane grasping a pigmy in his right foot.

‘ I know the short club value themselves very much ‘ upon Mr. Distich, who may possibly play some of his ‘ Pentameters upon us, but if he does he shall certainly ‘ be answered in Alexandrines. For we have a poet ‘ among us of a genius as exalted as his stature, and who ‘ is very well read in Longinus his treatise concerning
 ‘ the Sublime. Besides, I would have Mr. Distich con‘ sider, that if Horace was a short man, Musæus, who ‘ makes such a noble figure in Virgil’s sixth Æneid, was ‘ taller by the head and shoulders than all the people of ‘ Elysium. I shall therefore confront his “lepidissimum ‘ homuncionem” (a short quotation, and fit for a mem‘ ber of their club) with one that is much longer, and ‘ therefore more suitable to a member of ours.

Quos circumfusus sic est affata sibylla ;

Musæum ante omnes : medium nam plurima turba :

Hunc habet, atque humeris extantem suscipit altis.

Virg. Æn. 6. v. 666.

To these the sibyl thus her speech address’d :

And first to him * surrounded by the rest ;

Tow’ring his height, and ample was his breast.

DRYDEN.

‘ If after all, this society of little men proceed as they ‘ have begun to magnify themselves, and lessen men of ‘ higher stature, we have resolved to make a detach‘ ment, some evening or other, that shall bring away
 ‘ their whole club in a pair of panniers, and imprison ‘ them in a cupboard which we have set apart for that ‘ use, until they have made a publick recantation. As ‘ for the little bully, Tim Tuck, if he pretends to be ‘ cholerick, we shall treat him like his friend little Dicky,
 ‘ and hang him upon a peg until he comes to himself.
 ‘ I have told you our design, and let their little Machiavel ‘ prevent it if he can.

‘ This is, Sir, the long and the short of the matter.
 ‘ I am sensible I shall stir up a nest of wasps by it, but

* Musæus.

E. 4.

• let

' let them do their worst. I think that we serve our ' country by discouraging this little breed, and hindring
 ' it from coming into fashion. If the fair sex look upon ' us with an eye of favour, we shall make some attempts
 ' to lengthen out the human figure, and restore it to its ' ancient procerity. In the mean time we hope old ' age has not inclined you in favour of our antagonists;
 ' for I do assure you, Sir, we are all your high admirers,
 ' though none more than,

S I R, Yours, &c.

N^o 109 Thursday, July 16.

Pugnabat tunicâ sed tamen illa tegi.

Ovid. Amor. l. 1. Eleg. 5. v. 14.

Yet still she strove her naked charms to hide.

I Have received many letters from persons of all conditions in reference to my late discourse concerning the Tucker. Some of them are filled with reproaches and invectives. A lady who subscribes herself Teraininta bids me in a very pert manner mind my own affairs, and not pretend to meddle with their linnen; for that they do not dress for an old fellow, who cannot see them without a pair of spectacles. Another, who calls herself
 Bubnelia, vents her passion in scurrilous terms; an old Ninny-hammer, a Dotard, a Nincompoop, is the best language she can afford me. Florella indeed expostulates with me upon the subject, and only complains that she is forced to return a pair of stays which were made in the extremity of the fashion, that she might not be thought to encourage peeping.

But if on the one side I have been used ill (the common fate of all reformers) I have on the other side received great applauses and acknowledgments for what I have done, in having put a seasonable stop to this unaccountable humour of stripping, that was got among our

our British ladies. As I would much rather the world should know what is said to my praise, than to my disadvantage, I shall suppress what has been written to me by those who have reviled me on this occasion, and only publish those letters which approve my proceedings.

S I R,

I Am to give you thanks in the name of half a dozen superannuated beauties, for your paper of the 6th instant. We all of us pass for women of fifty, and a man of your sense knows how many additional years are always to be thrown into female computations of this nature. We are very sensible that several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and to leave us in the lurch by some of their late refinements. Two or three of them have been heard to say, that they would kill every old woman about town. In order to it, they began to throw off their clothes as fast as they could, and have played all those pranks which you have so seasonably taken notice of. We were forced to uncover after them, being unwilling to give out so soon, and be regarded as veterans in the beau monde. Some of us have already caught our deaths by it. For my own part, I have not been without a cold ever since this foolish fashion came up. I have followed it thus far with the hazard of my life, and how much farther I must go, no body knows, if your paper does not bring us relief. You may assure yourself that all the antiquated necks about town are very much obliged to you. Whatever fires and flames are concealed in our bosoms (in which perhaps we vye with the youngest of the sex) they are not sufficient to preserve us against the wind and weather. In taking so many old women under your care, you have been a real GUARDIAN to us, and saved the life of many of your contemporaries. In short, we all of us beg leave to subscribe ourselves,

most venerable NESTOR,

your humble servants and sisters.

I am very well pleased with this approbation of my good sisters. I must confess I have always looked on the Tucker to be the "Decus & Tutamen," the ornament and defence of the female neck. My good old lady, the lady Lizard, condemned this fashion from the beginning, and has observed to me, with some concern, that her sex at the same time they are letting down their stays, are tucking up their petticoats, which grow shorter and shorter every day. The leg discovers itself in proportion with the neck. But I may possibly take another occasion of handling this extremity, it being my design to keep a watchful eye over every part of the female sex, and to regulate them from head to foot. In the mean time I shall fill up my paper with a letter which comes to me from another of my obliged correspondents.

Dear GUARDEE,

THIS comes to you from one of those untuckered ladies whom you were so sharp upon on Monday was fennight. I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. You must know I am a famous olive beauty. But though this complexion makes a very good face when there are a couple of black sparkling eyes set in it, it makes but a very indifferent neck. Your fair women therefore thought of this fashion to insult the Olives and the Brunetts. They know very well, that a neck of ivory does not make so fine a show as one of alabaster. It is for this reason, Mr. Ironside, that they are so liberal in their discoveries. We know very well, that a woman of the whitest neck in the world, is to you no more than a woman of snow; but Ovid, in Mr. Duke's translation of him, seems to look upon it with another eye, when he talks of Corinna, and mentions —her heaving breast,

 Courting the hand, and suing to be prest.

Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings. Could you examine many of these ladies who present you with such beautiful snowy chests.

“ chests, you would find they are not all of a piece.
 “ Good father NESTOR, do not let us alone until you “ have shortened our necks, and reduced them to their “ ancient standard.

I am your most obliged,

humble servant,

OLIVIA.

I shall have a just regard to Olivia's remonstrance, though at the same time I cannot but observe that her modesty seems to be intirely the result of her complexion.

N^o 110 Friday, July 17.

——— Non ego paucis

Offendor maculis, quas aut incuria fudit

Aut humana parum cavit natura ——

Hor. Ars Poet. v. 351.

I will not quarrel with a slight mistake,
 Such as our nature's frailty may excuse.

ROSCOMMON.

THE candor which Horace shows in the motto of my paper, is that which distinguishes a critick from a caviller. He declares that he is not offended with those little faults in a poetical composition, which may be imputed to inadvertency, or to the imperfection of human nature. The truth of it is, there can be no more a perfect work in the world than a perfect man. To say of a celebrated piece that there are faults in it, is in effect to say no more, than that the author of it was a man. For this reason I consider every critick that attacks an author in high reputation, as the slave in the Roman triumph, who was to call out to the conqueror, “ Remember, Sir, that you are a man.” I speak this in relation to the following letter, which criticises the works of a great poet, whose very faults have more beauty in them than the most elaborate compositions of many more correct writers. The remarks are very curious and just, and introduced by a compliment to the work of an author, who I am sure would not care for being praised at the expence of another's reputation. I must therefore desire my correspondent to excuse me, if I do not publish either the preface or conclusion of his letter, but only the critical part of it.
 works

S I R,

* * * * *

OUR tragedy writers have been notoriously defective in giving proper sentiments to the persons they introduce. Nothing is more common than to hear an heathen talking of angels and devils, the joys of heaven and the pains of hell, according to the christian system. Lee's Alexander discovers himself to be a Cartesian in the first page of Œdipus.

———The sun's sick too,
Shortly he'll be an earth———

As Dryden's Cleomenes is acquainted with the Copernican hypothesis two thousand years before its invention.

I am pleas'd with my own work ; Jove was not more
With infant nature, when his spacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and seas,
To give it the first push, and see it roll
Along the vast abyss———

I have now Mr. Dryden's Don Sebastian before me, in which I find frequent allusions to ancient history, and the old mythology of the heathen. It is not very natural to suppose a king of Portugal would be borrowing thoughts out of Ovid's Metamorphoses when he talked even to those of his own court; but to allude to these Roman fables when he talks to an emperor of Barbary, seems very extraordinary. But observe how he defies him out of the classics in the following lines.

Why

Why didst not thou engage me man to man,
And try the virtue of that Gorgon face
To stare me into statue?

‘Almeyda at the same time is more book-learned ‘than Don Sebastian. She plays an Hydra upon the ‘emperor that is full as good as the Gorgon.

O that I had the fruitful heads of Hydra,
That one might burgeon where another fell!
Still wou’d I give thee work, still, still, thou tyrant,
And hiss thee with the last——

‘She afterwards, in allusion to Hercules, bids him ‘lay down the lion’s skin, and take the distaff;” and ‘in the following speech utters her passion still more ‘learnedly.

No, were we join’d, ev’n tho’ it were in death,
Our bodies burning in one funeral pile,
The prodigy of Thebes wou’d be renew’d,
And my divided flame should break from thine.

‘The emperor of Barbary shews himself acquainted ‘with the Roman poets as well as either of his prisoners,
‘and answers the foregoing speech in the same classic ‘strain.

Serpent, I will engender poison with thee:
Our offspring, like the seed of dragon’s teeth,
Shall issue arm’d, and fight themselves to death.

‘Ovid seems to have been Muley Molock’s favourite ‘author, witness the lines that follow.

She still inexorable, still imperious
And loud, as if like Bacchus born in thunder.

‘I shall conclude my remarks on his part with that ‘poetical complaint of his being in love, and leave ‘my reader to consider how prettily it would sound in ‘the mouth of an emperor of Morocco.

The god of love once more has shot his fires
Into my soul, and my whole heart receives him.

‘Muley Zeydan is as ingenious a man as his brother ‘Muley Molock; as where he hints at the story of ‘Castor and Pollux,

———May

———May we ne'er meet?
 For like the twins of Leda, when I mount,
 He gallops down the skies———

‘ As for the Mufti we will suppose that he was bred
 ‘ up a scholar, and not only versed in the law of Ma‘ homet, but acquainted with all kinds of polite learning.
 ‘ For this reason he is not at all surpris'd when Dorax ‘ calls him a Phaeton in one place, and in another tells ‘ him he is like Archimedes.

‘ The Mufti afterwards mentions Ximenes, Albor‘ noz, and cardinal Wolfey by name. The poet seems ‘ to think he may make every person, in his play, ‘ know as much as himself, and talk as well as he could ‘ have done on the same occasion. At least I believe ‘ every reader will agree with me, that the above-men‘ tioned sentiments, to which I might have added
 ‘ several others, would have been better suited to the court
 ‘ of Augustus, than that of Muley Molock. I grant
 ‘ they are beautiful in themselves, and much more so
 ‘ in that noble language, which was peculiar to this ‘ great poet. I only observe that they are improper ‘ for the persons who make use of them. Dryden is ‘ indeed generally wrong in his sentiments. Let any ‘ one read the dialogue between Octavia and Cleopatra,
 ‘ and he will be amazed to hear a Roman lady's mouth
 ‘ filled with such obscene rallery. If the virtuous Octa-
 ‘ via departs from her character, the loose Dolabella
 ‘ is no less inconsistent with himself, when all of a ‘ sudden, he drops the Pagan, and talks in the sentiments ‘ of revealed religion.

———Heav'n has but
 Our sorrow for our sins, and then delights
 To pardon erring man: Sweet mercy seems
 Its darling attribute, which limits justice;
 As if there were degrees in infinite;
 And infinite would rather want perfection
 Than punish to extent———

‘ I might shew several faults of the same nature in ‘ the celebrated Aurenge-Zebe. The impropriety of ‘ thoughts in the speeches of the great Mogul and his ‘ empress

emprefs has been generally censured. Take the sentiments out of the shining dress of words, and they would be too coarse for a scene in Billingsgate.

* * * * *

I am, &c.

N^o III Saturday, July 18.

*Hic aliquis de gente hircosâ Centurionum
Dicat : quod satis est, sapio mihi ; non ego curo
Esse quod arcesilas, ærumnosique Solones.*

Perf. Sat. 3. v. 77.

But, here, some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit,
Cries, I have sense, to serve my turn, in store ;
And he's a rascal who pretends to more :
Damme, whate'er those book-learn'd blockheads say,
Solon's the veriest fool in all the play. DRYDEN.

I Am very much concerned when I see young gentlemen of fortune and quality so wholly set upon pleasures and diversions, that they neglect all those improvements in wisdom and knowledge which may make them easy to themselves and useful to the world. The greatest part of our British youth lose their figure and grow out of fashion by that time they are five and twenty. As soon as the natural gaiety and amiableness of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to recommend them, but lie by the rest of their lives among the lumber and refuse of the species. It sometimes happens indeed, that for want of applying themselves in due time to the pursuits of knowledge, they take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore. I must therefore earnestly press my readers, who are in the flower of their youth, to labour at those accomplishments which which may set off their persons when their bloom is gone, and to lay in timely provisions for manhood and old age. In short, I would advise the youth of fifteen to be dressing up every day the man of fifty, or to consider how to make himself venerable at three-score.

Young men, who are naturally ambitious, would do well to observe how the greatest men of antiquity made it their ambition to excel all their contemporaries in knowledge. Julius Cæsar and Alexander, the most celebrated instances of human greatness, took a particular care to distinguish themselves by their skill in the arts and sciences. We have still extant several remains of the former, which justify the character given of him by the learned men of his own age. As for the latter, it is a known saying of his, that he was more obliged to Aristotle who had instructed him, than to Philip who had given him life and empire. There is a letter of his recorded by Plutarch and Aulus Gellius, which he wrote to Aristotle upon hearing that he had published those lectures he had given him in private. This letter was written in the following words at a time when he was in the height of his Persian conquests.

Alexander to Aristotle, greeting.

• YOU have not done well to publish your books of
 • select knowledge; for what is there now in
 • which I can surpass others, if those things which I
 • have been instructed in are communicated to every • body? For my own part I declare to you, I would,
 • rather excel others in knowledge than power. Farewel.

We see by this letter, that the love of conquest was but the second ambition in Alexander's soul. Knowledge is indeed that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raises one man above another. It finishes one half of the human soul. It makes being pleasant to us, fills the mind with entertaining views, and administers to it a perpetual series of gratifications. It gives ease to solitude, and gracefulness to retirement. It fills a publick station with suitable abilities, and adds a lustre to those who are in possession of them.

Learning.

Learning, by which I mean all useful knowledge, whether speculative or practical, is in popular and mixt governments the natural source of wealth and honour. If we look into most of the reigns from the conquest, we shall find that the favourites of each reign have been those who have raised themselves. The greatest men are generally the growth of that particular age in which they flourish. A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are the steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outshines the rest of his contemporaries. But when men are actually born to titles, it is almost impossible that they should fail of receiving an additional greatness, if they take care to accomplish themselves for it.

The story of Solomon's choice does not only instruct us in that point of history, but furnishes out a very fine moral to us, namely, that he who applies his heart to wisdom, does at the same time take the most proper method of gaining long life, riches and reputation, which are very often not only the rewards but the effects of wisdom.

As it is very suitable to my present subject, I shall first of all quote this passage in the words of sacred writ, and afterwards mention an allegory, in which this whole passage is represented by a famous French poet: not questioning but it will be very pleasing to such of my readers as have a taste of fine writing.

“ In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream
 “ by night: and God said, Ask what I shall give thee.
 “ And Solomon said, Thou hast showed unto thy servant
 “ David my father great mercy, according as he walked “ before thee in truth and in righteousness, and in “ uprightness of heart with thee, and thou hast kept for “ him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son
 “ to sit on his throne, as it is this day. And now, O Lord “ my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of “ David my father: And I am but a little child; I know
 “ not how to go out or come in. Give therefore thy ser“ vant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I “ may discern between good and bad: for who is able to “ judge this thy so great a people? And the speech “ pleased

“ pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing.
“ And God said unto him, because thou hast asked
“ this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life, “ neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked
“ the life of thine enemies, but has asked for thyself, “ understanding to discern judgment: Behold I have “ done according to thy words: Lo I have given thee
“ a wise and understanding heart, so that there was “ none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall “ any arise like unto thee. And I have also given thee “ that which thou hast not asked, both riches and “ honour, so that there shall not be any among the “ kings like unto thee all thy days. And if thou wilt “ walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my com“ mandments, as thy father David did walk, then I “ will lengthen thy days. And Solomon awoke, and “ behold, it was a Dream.—’

The French poet has shadowed this story in an allegory, of which he seems to have taken the hint from the fable of the three goddesses appearing to Paris, or rather from the vision of Hercules, recorded by Xenophon, where Pleasure and Virtue are represented as real persons making their court to the hero with all their several charms and allurements. Health, Wealth, Victory and Honour are introduced successively in their proper emblems and characters, each of them spreading her temptations, and recommending herself to the young monarch's choice. Wisdom enters the last, and so captivates him with her appearance, that he gives himself up to her. Upon which she informs him, that those who appeared before her were nothing else but her equipage, and that since he had placed his heart upon Wisdom; Health, Wealth, Victory and Honour should always wait on her as her handmaids.

N^o 112 Monday, July 20.

— — — — — udam
Spernit humum fugiente pennâ.

Hor. Od. 2. l. 3. v. 23.

Scorns the base earth, and crowd below ;
 And with a soaring wing still mounts on high.

CREECH.

THE philosophers of King Charles his reign were busy in finding out the art of flying. The famous Bishop Wilkins was so confident of success in it, that he says he does not question but in the next age it will be as usual to hear a man call for his wings when he is going a journey, as it is now to call for his boots. The humour so prevailed among the virtuofos of this reign, that they were actually making parties to go up to the moon together, and were more put to it in their thoughts how to meet with accommodations by the way, than how to get thither. Every one knows the Story of the great Lady, who at the same time was building castles in the air for their reception. I always leave such trite quotations to my reader's private recollection. For which reason also I shall forbear extracting out of authors several instances of particular persons who have arrived at some perfection in this art, and exhibited specimens of it before multitudes of beholders. Instead of this I shall present my reader with the following letter from an artist, who is now taken up with this Invention, and conceals his true name under that of Dædalus.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

‘ K Nowing that you are a great encourager of in‘ genuity, I think fit to acquaint you, that I ‘ have made a considerable progress in the art of flying.
 ‘ I flutter about my room two or three hours in a morn‘ ing, and when my wings are on, can go above a hun‘ dred

• dred yards at a hop, step and jump. I can fly already
• as well as a turkey-cock, and improve every day. If
• I proceed as I have begun, I intend to give the world
• a proof of my proficiency in this art. Upon the next
• publick Thanksgiving-day it is my design to sit astride
• the dragon upon Bow steeple, from whence, after the
• first discharge of the Tower guns, I intend to mount
• into the air, fly over Fleet-street, and pitch upon the
• May-pole in the Strand. From thence, by a gradual • descent, I shall make the best of my way for St. James's
• Park, and light upon the ground near Rosamond's
• Pond. This I doubt not will convince the world that
• I am no pretender; but before I set out, I shall desire
• to have a patent for making of wings, and that none
• shall presume to fly, under pain of death, with wings
• of any other man's making. I intend to work for the • court myself, and will have journeymen under me to • furnish the rest of the nation. I likewise desire, that
• I may have the sole teaching of persons of quality,
• in which I shall spare neither time nor pains until I
• have made them as expert as myself. I will fly with
• the women upon my back for the first fortnight. I • shall appear at the next masquerade dressed up in my • feathers and plumage like an Indian Prince, that the • quality may see how pretty they will look in their tra• velling habits. You know, Sir, there is an unaccount-
• able prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which
• reason when I talk of practising to fly, silly people
• think me an owl for my pains; but, Sir, you know
• better things. I need not enumerate to you the benefits
• which will accrue to the publick from this invention;
• as how the roads of England will be saved when we
• travel through these new high-ways, and how all fa• mily accounts will be lessened in the article of coaches
• and horses. I need not mention posts and packet-boats,
• with many other conveniencies of life, which will be • supplied this way. In short, Sir, when mankind are
• in possession of this art, they will be able to do more
• business in threescore and ten years, than they could
• do in a thousand by the methods now in use. I there-
• fore recommend myself and art to your patronage,
• and am

your most humble servant

T

I have fully considered the project of these our modern Dædalists, and am resolved so far to discourage it, as to prevent any person from flying in my time. It would fill the world with innumerable immoralities, and give such occasions for intrigues as people cannot meet with who have nothing but legs to carry them. You should have a couple of lovers make a midnight assignation upon the top of the monument, and see the cupola of St. Paul's covered with both sexes like the outside of a pigeon house. Nothing would be more frequent than to see a beau flying in at a garret-window, or a galant giving chase to his mistress, like a hawk after a lark. There would be no walking in a shady wood without springing a covey of Toasts. The poor husband could not dream what was doing over his head: If he were jealous indeed he might clip his wife's wings, but what would this avail when there were flocks of whore-masters perpetually hovering over his house? What concern would the father of a family be in all the time his daughter was upon the wing: Every heiress must have an old woman flying at her heels. In short, the whole air would be full of this kind of Gibier, as the French call it. I do allow, with my correspondent, that there would be much more business done than there is at present. However, should he apply for such a patent as he speaks of, I question not but there would be more petitions out of the City against it, than ever yet appeared against any other monopoly whatsoever. Every tradesman that cannot keep his wife a coach could keep her a pair of wings, and there is no doubt but she would be every morning and evening taking the air with them.

I have here only considered the ill consequences of this invention in the influence it would have on love-affairs. I have many more objections to make on other accounts; but these I shall defer publishing until I see my friend alstride the dragon.

N^o 113 Tuesday, July 21.Amphora cœpitInstitui ; currente rotâ, cur urceus exit?

Hor. Ars Poet. v. 21.

When you begin with so much pomp and show,
Why is the end so little and so low? ROSCOMMON.

I Last night received a letter from an honest citizen, who it seems is in his honey-moon. It is written by a plain man on a plain subject, but has an air of good sense and natural honesty in it, which may perhaps please the public as much as myself. I shall not therefore scruple the giving it a place in my paper, which is designed for common use, and for the benefit of the poor as well as rich.

Good Mr. IRONSIDE,

Cheapside, July 18.

I Have lately married a very pretty body, who being something younger and richer than myself, I was advised to go a wooing to her in a finer suit of clothes than ever I wore in my life ; for I love to dress plain, and suitable to a man of my rank. However, I gained her heart by it. Upon the wedding-day I put myself, according to custom, in another suit fire-new, with silver buttons to it. I am so out of countenance among my neighbours upon being so fine, that I heartily wish my clothes well worn out. I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain geer again. Besides, forsooth, they have put me in a silk night-gown and a gaudy fool's cap, and make me now and then stand in the window with it. I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing to see myself turned into such a pretty little master. They tell me I must appear in my wedding-suit for the first month at least ; after which I am resolved to come again to my every day's clothes, for at present every day is Sunday with me.

2

« me. Now in my mind, Mr. IRONSIDE, this is the « wrongest way of proceeding in the world. When a « man's person is new and unaccustomed to a young « body, he does not want any thing else to set him off.
 « The novelty of the lover has more charms than a « wedding-suit. I should think therefore, that a man « should keep his finery for the latter seasons of mar« riage, and not begin to dress until the honey-moon
 « is over. I have observed at a Lord-Mayor's feast,
 « that the sweet-meats do not make their appearance « until people are cloyed with beef and mutton, and « begin to lose their stomachs. But instead of this, we « serve up delicacies to our guests, when their appetites
 « are keen, and coarse diet when their bellies are full.
 « As bad as I hate my silver-buttoned coat and silk « night-gown, I am afraid of leaving them off, not « knowing whether my wife would not repent of her « marriage when she sees what a plain man she has to « her husband. Pray, Mr. IRONSIDE, write something « to prepare her for it, and let me know whether you « think she can ever love me in a hair button.

I am, &c.

« P. S. I forgot to tell you of my white gloves, which,
 « they say too, I must wear all the first month.'

My correspondent's observations are very just, and may be useful in low life, but to turn them to the advantage of people in higher stations, I shall raise the moral, and observe something parallel to the wooing and wedding-suit, in the behaviour of persons of figure.
 After long experience in the world, and reflections upon mankind, I find one particular occasion of unhappy marriages, which, though very common, is not very much attended to. What I mean is this. Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's holiday suit, which is to last no longer than until he is settled in the possession of his mistress. He resigns his inclinations and understanding to her humour and opinion. He neither loves nor hates, nor talks, nor thinks in contradiction to her. He is controlled by a nod,

nod, mortified by a frown, and transported by a smile. The poor young Lady falls in love with this supple creature, and expects of him the same behaviour for life. In a little time she finds that he has a will of his own, that he pretends to dislike what she approves, and that instead of treating her like a goddess, he uses her like a woman. What still makes the misfortune worse, we find the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. This naturally fills the spouse with fullness and discontent, spleen and vapour, which, with a little discreet management, make a very comfortable marriage. I very much approve of my friend Tom Truelove in this particular. Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship. His natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her, before marriage, in the same manner he intended to continue to do afterwards. Tom would often tell her, Madam, you see what a sort of man I am. If you will take me with all my faults about me, I promise to mend rather than grow worse. I remember Tom was once hinting his dislike of some little trifle his mistress had said or done. Upon which she asked him, how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? No, Madam, says Tom, I mention this now because you are at your own disposal, were you at mine I should be too generous to do it. In short, Tom succeeded, and has ever since been better than his word. The Lady has been disappointed on the right side, and has found nothing more disagreeable in the husband than she discovered in the lover.

N^o 114 Wednesday, July 22.

Alveos accipite, & ceris opus infundite :

Fuci recusant, apibus conditio placet.

Phædr. Fab. 13. l. 3. v. 9.

Take the hives, and fall to work upon the honey-combs;
The drones refuse, the bees accept the proposal.

I Think myself obliged to acquaint the publick that the Lion's head, of which I advertised them about a fortnight ago, is now erected at Button's coffee-house in Ruffel-Street, Covent-Garden, where it opens its mouth at all hours for the reception of such intelligence as shall be thrown into it. It is reckoned an excellent piece of workmanship, and was designed by a great hand in imitation of the antique Ægyptian lion, the face of it being compounded out of that of a lion and a wizzard. The features are strong and well furrowed. The whiskers are admired by all that have seen them. It is planted on the western side of the coffee-house, holding its paws under the chin upon a box, which contains every thing that he swallows. He is indeed a proper emblem of knowledge and action, being all head and paws.

I need not acquaint my readers, that my Lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and shall only beg of them to diet him with wholsom and substantial food. I must therefore desire that they will not gorge him either with nonsense or obscenity; and must likewise insist, that his mouth be not defiled with scandal, for I would not make use of him to revile the human species, and satyrize those who are his betters. I shall not suffer him to worry any man's reputation, nor indeed fall on any person whatsoever, such only excepted as disgrace the name of this generous animal, and under the title of lions contrive the ruin of their fellow subjects. I must desire likewise, that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and by his means convey their thoughts to one another. Those who are read in the history of the popes observe, that the Leos have been the best, and the innocents the worst of that species, and I hope that I shall not be thought to derogate from my lion's character, by representing him as such a peaceable good-natured well-designing beast.

I intend to publish once every week "the roarings of the lion," and hope to make him roar so loud as to be heard over all the British nation.

If my correspondents will do their parts in prompting him, and supplying him with suitable provision, I question not but the lion's head will be reckoned the best head in England.

There is a notion generally received in the world, that a lion is a dangerous creature to all women who are not virgins; which may have given occasion to a foolish report, that my lion's jaws are so contrived, as to snap the hands of any of the female sex, who are not thus qualified to approach it with safety. I shall not spend much time in exposing the falsity of this report, which I believe will not weigh any thing with women of sense: I shall only say, that there is not one of the sex in all the neighbourhood of Covent-Garden, who may not put her hand in his mouth with the same security as if she were a vestal. However, that the Ladies may not be deterred from corresponding with me by this method, I must acquaint them that the coffee-man has a little daughter of about four years old who has been virtuously educated, and will lend her hand upon this occasion to any Lady that shall desire it of her.

In the mean time I must further acquaint my fair readers, that I have thoughts of making a further provision for them at my ingenious friend Mr. Motteux's or at Corticelli's, or some other place frequented by the wits and beauties of the sex. As I have here a Lion's head for the men, I shall there erect an Unicorn's head for the Ladies, and will so contrive it, that they may put in their intelligence at the top of the horn, which shall convey it into a little receptacle at the bottom prepared for that purpose. Out of these two magazines I shall supply the town from time to time with what may tend

tend to their edification, and at the same time carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads, not a little beneficial both to the publick and to myself. As both these monsters will be very insatiable, and devour great quantities of paper, there will no small use redound from them to that manufacture in particular.

The following letter having been left with the keeper of the lion, with a request from the writer that it may be the first morsel which is put into his mouth, I shall communicate it to the publick as it came to my hand, without examining whether it be proper nourishment, as I intend to do for the future.

Mr. GUARDIAN,

‘ YOur predecessor, the Spectator, endeavoured but ‘ in vain, to improve the charms of the fair sex,
 ‘ by exposing their dress whenever it lunched into ex‘ tremities. Among the rest the great petticoat came ‘ under his consideration, but in contradiction to what‘ ever he has said, they still resolutely persist in this ‘ fashion. The form of their bottom is not, I confess, ‘ altogether the same; for whereas before it was of an ‘ orbicular make, they now look as if they were pressed,
 ‘ so that they seem to deny access to any part but the ‘ middle. Many are the inconveniencies that accrue
 ‘ to her Majesty’s loving subjects from the said petti‘ coats, as hurting mens shins, sweeping down the wares
 ‘ of industrious females in the streets, &c. I saw a young ‘ Lady fall down the other day; and believe me, Sir,
 ‘ she very much resembled an overturned bell without ‘ a clapper. Many other disasters I could tell you of,
 ‘ that befall themselves, as well as others, by means of ‘ this unwieldy garment. I wish, Mr. GUARDIAN, you ‘ would join with me in showing your dislike of such a ‘ monstrous fashion, and I hope when the Ladies see it ‘ is the opinion of two of the wisest men in England, ‘ they will be convinced of their folly.

I am, S I R,
 your daily reader and admirer,

TOM PLAIN.

N^o 115 Thursday, July 23.

Ingenium par materiæ—

Juv. Sat. i. v. 151.

A genius equal to the subject.

WHEN I read rules of Criticism I immediately inquire after the works of the author who has written them, and by that means discover what it is he likes in a composition; for there is no question but every man aims at least at what he thinks beautiful in others. If I find by his own manner of writing that he is heavy and tasteless, I throw aside his Criticisms with a secret indignation, to see a man without genius or politeness dictating to the world on subjects which I find are above his reach.

If the Critick has published nothing but rules and observations in criticism, I then consider whether there be a propriety and elegance in his thoughts and words, clearness and delicacy in his remarks, wit and good-breeding in his rallery; but if in the place of all these I find nothing but dogmatical stupidity, I must beg such a writer's pardon if I have no manner of deference for his judgment, and refuse to conform myself to his taste.

So Macer and Mundungus school the times,
And write in rugged prose the softer rules of rhimes,
Well do they play the careful criticks part,
Instructing doubly by their matchless art:
Rules for good verse they first with pains indite,
Then shew us what are bad, by what they write.

Mr. CONGREVE to Sir R. TEMPLE,

The greatest Criticks among the ancients are those who have the most excelled in all other kinds of composition, and have shown the height of good writing even in the precepts which they have given for it.

Among

Among the moderns likewise no critick has ever pleased, or been looked upon as authentick, who did not shew by his practice that he was a master of the theory. I have now one before me, who after having given many proofs of his performances both in poetry and prose, obliged the world with several critical works. The author I mean is Strada. His PROLUSION on the stile of the most famous among the ancient Latin poets who are extant, and have written in epick verse, is one of the most entertaining, as well as the most just pieces of Criticism that I have ever read. I shall make the plan of it the subject of this day's paper.

It is commonly known that pope Leo the tenth was a great patron of learning, and used to be present at the performances, conversations, and disputes of all the most polite writers of his time. Upon this bottom Strada founds the following narrative. When this pope was at his Villa, that stood upon an eminence on the banks of the Tiber, the poets contrived the following pageant or machine for his entertainment. They made a huge floating mountain, that was split at the top in imitation of Parnassus. There were several marks on it that distinguished it for the habitation of heroick poets. Of all the muses Calliope only made her appearance. It was covered up and down with groves of laurel. Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. This floating Parnassus fell down the river to the sound of trumpets, and in a kind of epick measure, for it was rowed forward by six huge wheels, three on each side, that by their constant motion carried on the machine, until it arrived before the pope's Villa.

The representatives of the ancient poets were disposed in stations suitable to their respective characters. Statius was posted on the highest of the two summits, which was fashioned in the form of a precipice, and hung over the rest of the mountain in a dreadful manner, so that people regarded him with the same terror and curiosity as they look upon a daring rope-dancer whom they expect to fall every moment.

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was lower, and at the same time more smooth and even than the former. It was observed likewise to be more barren, and to produce, on some spots of it, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks.

Lucretius was very busy about the roots of the mountains, being wholly intent upon the motion and management of the machine which was under his conduct, and was indeed of his invention. He was sometimes so engaged among the wheels, and covered with machinery, that not above half the poet appeared to the spectators, though at other times, by the working of the engines, he was raised up, and became as conspicuous as any of the brotherhood.

Ovid did not settle in any particular place, but ranged over all Parnassus with great nimbleness and activity. But as he did not much care for the toil and pains that were requisite to climb the upper part of the hill, he was generally roving about the bottom of it.

But there was none who was placed in a more eminent station, and had a greater prospect under him than Lucan. He vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth, and seemed desirous of mounting into the clouds upon the back of him. But as the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, insomuch that the people often gave him for gone, and cried out, every now and then, that he was tumbling.

Virgil, with great modesty in his looks, was seated by Calliope, in the midst of a plantation of laurels which grew thick about him, and almost covered him with their shade. He would not perhaps have been seen in this retirement, but that it was impossible to look upon Calliope without seeing Virgil at the same time.

This poetical masquerade was no sooner arrived before the pope's Villa, but they received an invitation to land, which they did accordingly. The hall prepared for their reception was filled with an audience of the greatest eminence for quality and politeness. The poets took their places, and repeated each of them a poem written in the stile and spirit of those immortal authors whom they represented. The subject of these several poems, poems, with the judgement passed upon each of them, may be an agreeable entertainment for another day's paper.

N^o 116

Friday, July 24.

Ridiculum acri

Fortius & melius—

Hor. Sat. 10. l. 1. v. 14.

A jest in scorn points out, and hits the thing
More home, than the morosest satire's sting.

THERE are many little enormities in the world, which our Preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the Pulpit. Should they recommend the tucker in a pathetick discourse, their audiences would be apt to laugh out. I knew a parish, where the top-woman of it used always to appear with a patch upon some part of her forehead. The good man of the place preached at it with great zeal for almost a twelvemonth; but instead of fetching out the spot which he perpetually aimed at, he only got the name of Parson Patch for his pains. Another is to this day called by the name of Doctor Top-knot for reasons of the same nature. I remember the Clergy during the time of Cromwell's usurpation, were very much taken up in reforming the female world, and showing the vanity of those outward ornaments in which the sex so much delights. I have heard a whole sermon against a white-wash, and have known a coloured ribbon made the mark of the unconverted. The Clergy of the present age are not transported with these indiscreet fervours, as knowing that it is hard for a reformer to avoid ridicule, when he is severe upon subjects which are rather apt to produce mirth than seriousness. For this reason I look upon myself to be of great use to these good men; while they are employed in extirpating mortal sins, and crimes of a higher nature, ture, I should be glad to rally the world out of indecencies and venial transgressions. While the Doctor is curing distempers that have the appearance of danger or death in them, the Merry-Andrew has his separate packet for the megrims and tooch-ach.

Thus much I thought fit to premise before I resume the subject which I have already handled, I mean the naked bosoms of our British Ladies. I hope they will not take it ill of me, if I still beg that they will be covered. I shall here present them with a letter on that particular, as it was yesterday conveyed to me through the lion's mouth. It comes from a quaker, and is as follows:

NESTOR IRONSIDE,

‘ OUR friends like thee. We rejoice to find thou ‘ beginnest to have a glimmering of the light in ‘ thee: We shall pray for thee, that thou mayest be more ‘ and more enlightened. Thou givest good advice to the ‘ women of this world to clothe themselves like unto ‘ our friends, and not to expose their fleshly temptations,
‘ for it is against the record. Thy lion is a good lion;
‘ he roareth loud, and is heard a great way, even unto
‘ the sink of Babylon; for the scarlet whore is governed
‘ by the voice of thy lion. Look on his order.

“ Rome July 8, 1713. A placard is published here, “ forbidding women of whatsoever quality, to go with “ naked breasts; and the priests are ordered not to ad“ mit the transgressors of this law to confession, nor to “ communion, neither are they to enter the cathedrals, “ under severe penalties.”

‘ These lines are faithfully copied from the nightly
‘ paper, with this title written over it, “ The Evening “ Post, from Saturday July the eighteenth, to Tuesday
“ July the twenty-first.”

‘ Seeing thy lion is obeyed at this distance, we hope
‘ the foolish women in thy own country will listen to ‘ thy admonitions. Otherwise thou art desired to ‘ make him still roar till all the beasts of the forest shall ‘ tremble. I must again repeat unto thee, friend Nestor,
‘ the whole brotherhood have great hopes of thee, and ‘ expect to see thee so inspired with the light, as thou ‘ mayest

‘ mayest speedily become a great preacher of the word.
‘ I wish it heartily.

Thine,

in every thing that is praise-worthy,

Tom’s Coffee-house, in Birchen-lane, the 23d day of the month called July.

TOM TREMBLE.

It happens very odly that the pope and I should have the same thoughts much about the same time. My enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter. Let that be as it will, I shall not be ashamed to join with his holiness in those particulars which are indifferent between us, especially when it is for the reformation of the finer half of mankind. We are both of us about the same age, and consider this fashion, in the same view. I hope that it will not be able to resist his bull and my lion. I am only afraid that our ladies will take occasion from hence to show their zeal for the protestant religion, and pretend to expose their naked bosoms only in opposition to popery.

Nº 117

Saturday, July 25.

Cura pii diis sunt——— Ovid. Met. l. 8. v. 724.

The good are heav'n's peculiar care.

Looking over the late edition of Monsieur Boileau's works, I was very much pleased with the article which he has added to his notes on the translation of Longinus. He there tells us, that the sublime in writing rises either from the nobleness of the thought, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase, and that the perfect sublime arises from all these three in conjunction together. He produces an instance of this perfect sublime in four verses from the Athalia of Monsieur Racine. When Abner, one of the chief officers of the court, represents to Joad the high-priest, that the queen was incensed against him, the high-priest, not in the least terrified at the news, returns this answer.

*Celui qui met un frein à la fureur des flots,
Sçait aussi des méchans arrêter les complots.
Soumis avec respect à sa volonté sainte.
Je crains Dieu, cher Abner, & n'ai point d'autre crainte.*

“ He who ruleth the raging of the sea, knows also how “ to check the designs of the ungodly. I submit myself “ with reverence to his holy will. O Abner, I fear my “ God, and I fear none but him.” Such a thought gives no less a sublimity to human nature, than it does to good writing. This religious fear, when it is produced by just apprehensions of a divine power, naturally overlooks all human greatness that stands in competition with it, and extinguishes every other terror that can settle itself in the heart of man; it lessens and contracts the figure of the most exalted person: it disarms the tyrant and executioner, and represents to our minds the most enraged and the most powerful as altogether harmless and impotent.

There is no true fortitude which is not founded upon this fear, as there is no other principle of so settled and fixed a nature. Courage that grows from constitution very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, breaks out on all occasions without judgment or discretion. That courage which proceeds from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason.

What can the man fear, who takes care in all his actions to please a Being that is omnipotent? A Being who is able to crush all his adversaries? A Being that can divert any misfortune from befalling him, or turn any such misfortune to his advantage? the person who lives with this constant and habitual regard to the great superintendant of the world, is indeed sure that no real evil can come into his lot. Blessings may appear under the shape of pains, losses and disappointments; but let him have patience, and he will see them in their proper figures. Dangers may threaten him, but he may rest satisfied that they will either not reach him; or that, if they do, they will be the instruments of good to him. In short, he may look upon all crosses and accidents, sufferings and afflictions, as means which are made use of to bring him to happiness. This is even the worst of that man's condition whose mind is possessed with the habitual fear of which I am now speaking. But it very often happens, that those which appear evils in our own eyes, appear also as such to him who has human nature under his care; in which case they are certainly averted from the person who has made himself, by this virtue, an object of divine favour. Histories are full of instances of this nature, where men of virtue have had extraordinary escapes out of such dangers as have inclosed them, and which have seemed inevitable.

There is no example of this kind in pagan history which more pleases me, than that which is recorded in the life of Timoleon. This extraordinary man was famous for referring all his successes to providence. Cornelius Nepos acquaints us that he had in his house a private

private chapel, in which he used to pay his devotions to the goddess who represented providence among the heathens. I think no man was ever more distinguished by the deity, whom he blindly worshipped, than the great person I am speaking of in several occurrences of his life, but particularly in the following one which I shall relate out of Plutarch.

Three persons had entered into a conspiracy to assassinate Timoleon, as he was offering up his devotions in a certain temple. In order to it, they took their several stands in the most convenient places for their purpose. As they were waiting for an opportunity to put their design in execution, a stranger having observed one of the conspirators, fell upon him and slew him. Upon which the other two, thinking their plot had been discovered, threw themselves at Timoleon's feet, and confessed the whole matter. This stranger, upon examination, was found to have understood nothing of the intended assassination; but having several years before had a brother killed by the conspirator, whom he here put to death, and having until now sought in vain for an opportunity of revenge, he chanced to meet the murderer in the temple, who had planted himself there for the above-mentioned purpose. Plutarch cannot forbear, on this occasion, speaking with a kind of rapture on the schemes of providence; which, in this particular, had so contrived it, that the stranger should, for so great a space of time, be debarred the means of doing justice to his brother, until, by the same blow that revenged the death of one innocent man, he preserved the life of another.

For my own part, I cannot wonder that a man of Timoleon's religion, should have his intrepidity and firmness of mind; or that he should be distinguished by such a deliverance, as I have here related.

CSXV22

Monday

N^o 118

Monday, July 27.

———Largitor ingeni
Venter———

Perf. Prol. v. 10.

Witty want.

DRYDEN.

I Am very well pleased to find that my lion has given such universal content to all that have seen him. He has had a greater number of visitants than any of his brotherhood in the Tower. I this morning examined his maw, where among much other food I found the following delicious morsels.

TO NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq;

MR. GUARDIAN,

I Am a daily peruser of your papers. I have read over and over your discourse concerning the Tucker; as likewise your paper of Thursday the 16th instant, in which you say it is your intention to keep a watchful eye over every part of the female sex, and to regulate them from head to foot. Now, Sir, being by profession a mantua-maker, who am employed by the most fashionable ladies about town, I am admitted to them freely at all hours; and seeing them both drest and undrest, I think there is no person better qualified than myself to serve you (if your honour pleases) in the nature of a Lionsess. I am in the whole secret of their fashion, and if you think fit to entertain me in this character, I will have a constant watch over them, and doubt not I shall send you from time to time such private intelligence, as you will find of use to you in your future papers.

S I R, this being a new proposal, I hope you will not let me lose the benefit of it; but that you will first hear me roar before you treat with any body else. As a sample of my intended services, I give you this timely notice of an improvement you will shortly see in the exposing of the female chest, which in defiance of your gravity is going to be uncovered yet more and more;

fo

' so that, to tell you truly, Mr. IRONSIDE, I am in some ' fear lest my profession should in a little time become ' wholly unnecessary. I must here explain to you a ' small covering, if I may call it so, or rather an orna' ment for the neck, which you have not yet taken
 ' notice of. This consists of a narrow lace, or a small
 ' skirt of fine ruffled linen, which runs along the upper ' part of the stays before, and crosses the breasts, with' out rising to the shoulders; and being as it were a part ' of the tucker, yet kept in use, is therefore by a par' ticular name called the modesty-piece. Now, Sir,
 ' what I have to communicate to you at present is, that
 ' at a late meeting of the stripping ladies, in which ' were present several eminent toasts and beauties, it
 ' was resolved for the future to lay the modesty-piece
 ' wholly aside. It is intended at the same time to lower
 ' the stays considerably before, and nothing but the ' unsettled weather has hindered this design from being ' already put in execution. Some few indeed objected
 ' to this last improvement, but were overruled by the ' rest, who alledged it was their intention, as they inge-
 ' niously expressed it, to level their breast-works intirely,
 ' and to trust to no defence but their own virtue.

I am, S I R,

(if you please) your secret servant.

LEONILLA FIGLEAF.

Dear Sir,

' AS by name, and duty bound, I yesterday brought
 ' in a prey of paper for my patron's dinner; but
 ' by the forwardness of his paws he seemed ready to put
 ' it into his own mouth, which does not enough resem' ble its prototypes, whose throats are open sepulchres.
 ' I assure you, Sir, unless he gapes wider he will sooner
 ' be felt than heard. Witness my hand,

JACKALL.

TO NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq;

Sage NESTOR,

' Lions being esteemed by naturalists, the most ge' nerous of beasts, the noble and majestick ap' pearance they make in poetry, wherein they so often ' represent

‘ represent the hero himself, made me always think that ‘ name very ill applied to a profligate set of men, at ‘ present going about seeking whom to devour: And ‘ though I cannot but acquiesce in your account of the ‘ derivation of that title to them, it is with great satis‘ faction I hear you are about to restore them to their ‘ former dignity, by producing one of that species so ‘ public-spirited, as to roar for reformation of man‘ ners. “ I will roar” (says the clown in Shakespear)
‘ that it will do any man’s heart good to hear me; I ‘ will roar, that I will make the duke say, Let him ‘ roar again, let him roar again.” Such success, and ‘ such applause I do not question but your lion will ‘ meet with, whilst, like that of Samson, his strength ‘ shall bring forth sweetness, and his entrails abound
‘ with honey.

‘ At the same time that I congratulate with the ‘ republic of beasts upon this honour done to their king,
‘ I must condole with us poor mortals, who by distance
‘ of place are rendered incapable of paying our respects
‘ to him, with the same assiduity as those who are ‘ ushered into his presence by the discreet Mr. Button.
‘ Upon this account, Mr. Ironside, I am become a ‘ suitor to you, to constitute an out-riding lion; or ‘ if you please, a jackall or two, to receive and remit
‘ our homage in a more particular manner than is ‘ hitherto provided. As it is, our tenders of duty ‘ every now and then miscarry by the way; at least the ‘ natural self-love that makes us unwilling to think ‘ any thing that comes from us worthy of contempt, ‘ incline us to believe so. Methinks it were likewise ‘ necessary to specify, by what means a present from ‘ a fair hand may reach his brindled majesty; the place
‘ of his residence being very unfit for a lady’s personal ‘ appearance.

I am your most constant reader, and admirer,

N. R.

Dear

Dear NESTOR,

‘ IT is a well known proverb in a certain part of this ‘ kingdom, “ Love me, love my dog ;” and I hope ‘ you will take it as a mark of my respect for your per‘ son that I here bring a bit for your lion.’*

What follows being secret history, it will be printed in other papers ; wherein the lion will publish his private intelligence.

N^o 119 Tuesday, July 28.

——— poetarum veniet manus, auxilio quæ
Sit mihi———

Hor. Sat. 4. l. i. v. 141.

A band of poets to my aid I'll call.

CREECH.

THere is nothing which more shows the want of taste and discernment in a writer than the decrying of any author in gross ; especially of an author who has been the admiration of multitudes, and that too in several ages of the world. This, however, is the general practice of all illiterate and undistinguishing criticks. Because Homer and Virgil and Sophocles have been commended by the learned of all times, every scribler who has no relish of their beauties, gives himself an air of rapture when he speaks of them. But as he praises these he knows not why, there are others whom he depreciates with the same vehemence and upon the same account. We may see after what a different manner Strada proceeds in his judgment on the Latin poets ; for I intend to publish, in this paper, a continuation of that PROLUSION which was the subject of the last Thursday. I shall therefore give my reader a short account in prose of every poem which was produced in the learned assembly there described ; and if he is thoroughly conversant in the works of those ancient authors, he will see with how much judgment every subject is adapted to the poet who makes use of it, and with

with how much delicacy every particular poet's way of writing is characterised in the censure that is passed upon it. Lucan's representative was the first who recited before that august assembly. As Lucan was a Spaniard, his poem does honour to that nation, which at the same time makes the romantic bravery in the hero of it more probable.

Alphonso was the governor of a town invested by the Moors. During the blockade they made his only son their prisoner, whom they brought before their walls, and exposed to his father's sight, threatening to put him to death, if he did not immediately give up the town. The father tells them if he had an hundred sons he would rather see them all perish, than do an ill action, or betray his country. But, says he, if you take a pleasure in destroying the innocent, you may do it if you please: Behold a sword for your purpose. Upon which he threw his sword from the wall, returned to his palace, and was able, at such a juncture, to sit down to the repast, which was prepared for him. He was soon raised by the shouts of the enemy, and the cries of the besieged. Upon returning again to the walls, he saw his son lying in the pangs of death; but, far from betraying any weakness at such a spectacle, he upbraids his friends for their sorrow, and returns to finish his repast.

Upon the recital of this story, which is exquisitely drawn up in Lucan's spirit and language, the whole assembly declared their opinion of Lucan in a confused murmur. The poem was praised or censured according to the prejudices which every one had conceived in favour or disadvantage of the author. These were so very great, that some had placed him in their opinions above the highest, and others beneath the lowest of the Latin poets. Most of them however agreed, that Lucan's genius was wonderfully great, but at the same time too haughty and headstrong to be governed by art, and that his stile was like his genius, learned, bold and lively, but withal too tragical and blustering. In a word; that he chose rather a great than a just reputation; to which they added, that he was the first of the Latin poets who deviated from the purity of the Roman language.

The representative of Lucretius told the assembly, that they should soon be sensible of the difference between a poet who was a native of Rome, and a stranger who had been adopted into it: After which he entered upon his subject, which I find exhibited to my hand in a speculation of one of my predecessors.

Strada, in the person of Lucretius, gives an account of a chimerical correspondence between two friends, by the help of a certain loadstone, which had such a virtue in it, that if it touched two several needles, when one of the needles so touched began to move, the other, though at never so great a distance, moved at the same time, and in the same manner. He tells us, that two friends, being each of them possess of one of these needles, make a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Then they fixed one of the needles on each of these plates in such a manner that it could move round without impediment, so as to touch any of the four and twenty letters. Upon their separating from one another into distant countries, they agreed to withdraw themselves punctually into their closets at a certain hour of the day, and to converse with one another by means of this their invention. Accordingly, when they were some hundred miles asunder, each of them shut himself up in his closet at the time appointed, and immediately cast his eyes upon his dial-plate. If he had a mind to write any thing to his friend, he directed his needle to every letter that formed the words which he had occasion for, making a little pause at the end of every word or sentence to avoid confusion. The friend, in the mean while, saw his own sympathetic needle moving of itself to every letter, which that of his correspondent pointed at: By this means they talked together across a whole continent, and conveyed their thoughts to one another in an instant over cities or mountains, seas or desarts.

The whole audience were pleased with the artifice of the poet who represented Lucretius, observing very well how he had laid asleep their attention to the simplicity of his stile in some verses, and to the want of harmony

harmony in others, by fixing their minds to the novelty of his subject, and to the experiment which he related. Without such an artifice they were of opinion that nothing would have sounded more harsh than Lucretius's diction and numbers. But it was plain that the more learned part of the assembly were quite of another mind. These allowed that it was peculiar to Lucretius above all other poets, to be always doing or teaching something, that no other stile was so proper to teach in, or gave a greater pleasure to those who had a true relish for the Roman tongue. They added further, that if Lucretius had not been embarrassed with the difficulty of his matter, and a little led away by an affectation of antiquity, there could not have been any thing more perfect than his poem.

Claudian succeeded Lucretius, having chosen for his subject the famous contest between the nightingale and the lutanist, which every one is acquainted with, especially since Mr. Philips has so finely improved that hint in one of his Pastorals.

He had no sooner finished but the assembly rung with acclamations made in his praise. His first beauty, which every one owned, was the great clearness and perspicuity which appeared in the plan of his poem. Others were wonderfully charmed with the smoothness of his verse, and the flowing of his numbers, in which there were none of those elisions and cuttings off so frequent in the works of other poets. There were several however of a more refined judgment, who ridiculed that infusion of foreign phrases with which he had corrupted the Latin tongue, and spoke with contempt of the equability of his numbers that cloyed and fatiated the ear for want of variety: To which they likewise added, a frequent and unseasonable affectation of appearing sonorous and sublime.

The sequel of this PROLUSION shall be the work of another day.

Wednesday,

N^o 120 Wednesday, July 29.

— Nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to study household good,
And good works in her husband to promote.

MILTON.

A Bit for the L I O N.

S I R,

‘ A S soon as you have set up your Unicorn, there is ‘ no question but the Ladies will make him push ‘ very furiously at the men; for which reason I think it ‘ is good to be beforehand with them, and make the Lion ‘ roar aloud at female irregularities. Among these, I ‘ wonder how their Gaming has so long escaped your ‘ notice. You who converse with the sober family of ‘ the Lizards, are perhaps a stranger to these Virago’s
‘ but what would you say, should you see the Sparkler ‘ shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and ‘ thumping the table with a dice-box? Or how would ‘ you like to hear the good widow-lady herself return‘ ing to her house at midnight, and alarming the whole ‘ street with a most enormous rap, after having sat up ‘ until that time at Crimp or Ombre? Sir, I am the hus‘ band of one of these female gamesters, and a great ‘ loser by it both in my rest and my pocket. As my ‘ wife reads your papers, one upon this subject might ‘ be of use both to her, and

‘ your humble servant.’

I should ill deserve the name of GUARDIAN, did I not caution all my fair wards against a practice which when it runs to excess, is the most shameful, but one, that the female world can fall into. The ill consequences of it are more than can be contained in this paper. However, that I may proceed in method, I shall consider them. First, as they relate to the mind. Secondly, as they relate to the body.

Could

Could we look into the mind of a female gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores. Her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens and knaves. The day lies heavy upon her until the play-season returns, when for half a dozen hours together all her faculties are employed in shuffling, cutting, dealing, and sorting out a pack of cards, and no ideas to be discovered in a soul which calls itself rational, excepting little square figures of painted and spotted paper. Was the understanding, that divine part in our composition, given for such an use? Is it thus that we improve the greatest talent human nature is endowed with? What would a superior being think, were he shown this intellectual faculty in a female gamester, and at the same time told, that it was by this she was distinguished from brutes, and allied to angels?

When our women thus fill their imaginations with pips and counters, I cannot wonder at the story I have lately heard of a new-born child that was marked with the five of clubs.

Their passions suffer no less by this practice than their understandings and imaginations. What hope and fear, joy and anger, sorrow and discontent break out all at once in a fair assembly upon so noble an occasion as that of turning up a card? Who can consider without a secret indignation that all those affections of the mind which should be consecrated to their children, husbands and parents, are thus vilely prostituted and thrown away upon a hand at Loo? For my own part, I cannot but be grieved when I see a fine woman fretting and bleeding inwardly from such trivial motives: When I behold the face of an angel agitated and discomposed by the heart of a fury.

Our minds are of such a make, that they naturally give themselves up to every diversion which they are much accustomed to; and we always find that play, when followed with assiduity, engrosses the whole woman. She quickly grows uneasy in her own family, takes but little pleasure in all the domestic innocent endearments of life, and grows more fond of Pam, than of her husband. My friend Theophrastus, the best of husbands and of fathers, has often complained to me, with tears in his eyes, of the late hours he is forced to keep if he would enjoy his wife's conversation. When she returns to me with joy in her face, it does not arise, says he, from the sight of her husband, but from the good luck she has had at cards. On the contrary, says he, if she has been a loser I am doubly a sufferer by it. She comes home out of humour, is angry with every body, displeased with all I can do or say, and in reality for no other reason, but because she has been throwing away my estate. What charming bed-fellows and companions for life are men likely to meet with that choose their wives out of such women of vogue and fashion? What a race of worthies, what patriots, what heroes, must we expect from mothers of this make?
and

I come in the next place to consider the ill consequences which Gaming has on the bodies of our female adventurers. It is so ordered that almost every thing which corrupts the soul decays the body. The beauties of the face and mind are generally destroyed by the same means. This consideration should have a particular weight with the female world, who were designed to please the eye and attract the regards of the other half of the species. Now there is nothing that wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which naturally attend them. Hollow eyes, haggard looks, and pale complexions, are the natural indications of a female gamester. Her morning sleeps are not able to repair her midnight watchings. I have known a woman carried off half dead from Bassette, and have many a time grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. In short, I never knew a thorough-paced female gamester hold her beauty two winters together.

But there is still another case in which the body is more endangered than in the former. All play-debts must be paid in specie, or by an equivalent. The man that plays beyond his income pawns his estate; the woman must find out something else to mortgage, when her pin-money money is gone: The husband has his lands to dispose of, the wife her person. Now when the female body is once dipped, if the creditor be very importunate, I leave my reader to consider the consequences.

N^o 121 Thursday, July 30.

Hinc exaudiri gemitus, iræque leonum.

Virg. Æn. 7. v. 150

Hence to our ear the roar of lions came.

Roarings of the Lion.

Old NESTOR,

‘ E VER since the first notice you gave of the erection of that useful monument of yours in Button’s coffee-house, I have had a restless ambition to imitate the renowned London Prentice, and boldly venture my hand down the throat of your Lion. The subject of this letter is a relation of a club whereof I am member, and which has made a considerable noise of late, I mean the Silent Club. The year of our institution is 1694, the number of members twelve, and the place of our meeting is Dumb’s Alley in Holborn. We look upon ourselves as the relicks of the old Pythagoreans, and have this maxim in common with them, which is the foundation of our design, that “Talking spoils company.” The president of our society is one who was born deaf and dumb, and owes that blessing to nature, which in the rest of us is owing to industry alone. I find upon inquiry, that the greater part of us are married men, and such whose wives are remarkably loud at home. Hither we fly for refuge, and enjoy at once the two greatest and most valuable blessings, company and retirement. When that eminent relation of yours, the Spectator, published his weekly papers, and gave us that remarkable account of his silence (for you must know, though we do not read, yet ‘ yet we inspect all such useful essays) we seemed unani‘ mous to invite him to partake our secrecy, but it was ‘ unluckily objected, that he had just then published a ‘ discourse of his at his own club, and not arrived to ‘ that happy inactivity of the tongue, which we expected

‘ from a man of his understanding, You will wonder, ‘ perhaps, how we managed this debate; but it will be ‘ easily accounted for, when I tell you that our fingers ‘ are as nimble, and as infallible interpreters of our ‘ thoughts, as other mens tongues are; yet even this ‘ mechanic eloquence is only allowed upon the weigh‘ tiest occasions. We admire the wise institutions of the ‘ Turks, and other eastern nations, where all commands ‘ are performed by officious mutes; and we wonder that
‘ the polite courts of Christendom should come so far ‘ short of the majesty of barbarians. Ben Johnson has ‘ gained an eternal reputation among us by his play call‘ ed The Silent Woman. Every member here is another ‘ Morose while the club is sitting, but at home may talk
‘ as much and as fast as his family occasions require, ‘ without breach of statute. The advantages we find
‘ from this quaker-like assembly are many. We consider,
‘ that the understanding of man is liable to mistakes,
‘ and his will fond of contradictions; that disputes,
‘ which are of no weight in themselves, are often very ‘ considerable in their effects. The disuse of the tongue
‘ is the only effectual remedy against these. All party ‘ concerns, all private scandal, all insults over another ‘ man’s weaker reasons, must there be lost, where no ‘ disputes arise. Another advantage which follows from ‘ the first (and which is very rarely to be met with) is,
‘ that we are all upon the same level in conversation.
‘ A wag of my acquaintance used to add a third, viz.
‘ that, if ever we do debate, we are sure to have all our ‘ arguments at our fingers ends. Of all Longinus’s re‘ marks, we are most enamoured with that excellent pas‘ sage, where he mentions Ajax’s silence as one of the ‘ noblest instances of the sublime; and (if you will allow ‘ me to be free with a namesake of yours) I should think ‘ that the everlasting story-teller, Nestor, had he been ‘ likened to the ass instead of our hero, he had suffered ‘ less by the comparison.

‘ I have

‘ I have already described the practice and sentiments
 ‘ of this society, and shall but barely mention the re‘ port of the neighbourhood, that we are not only as ‘ mute as fishes, but that we drink like fishes too; that ‘ we are like the Welshman’s owl, though we do not ‘ sing, we pay it off with thinking. Others take us for ‘ an assembly of disaffected persons; nay, their zeal to ‘ the government has carried them so far as to send, last ‘ week, a party of constables to surprize us. You ‘ may easily imagine how exactly we represented the ‘ Roman senators of old, sitting with majestic silence,
 ‘ and undaunted at the approach of an army of Gauls.
 ‘ If you approve of our undertaking, you need not de‘ clare it to the world; your silence shall be interpreted ‘ as consent given to the honourable body of mutes,
 ‘ and in particular to your humble servant,

Ned Mum.

P. S. ‘ We have had but one word spoken since the ‘ foundation, for which the member was expelled by the ‘ old Roman custom of bending back the thumb. He ‘ had just received the news of the battle of Hochstet,
 ‘ and being too impatient to communicate his joy, was ‘ unfortunately betrayed into a lapsus linguæ. We acted
 ‘ on the principles of the Roman Manlius, and though
 ‘ we approved of the cause of his error as just, we con‘ demned the effect as a manifest violation of his duty.

I never could have thought a dumb man would have roared so well out of my Lion’s mouth. My next pretty correspondent, like Shakespear’s Lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars as it were any nightingale.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

July 28, 1713.

‘ I Was afraid at first you were only in jest, and had a ‘ mind to expose our nakedness for the diversion of ‘ the town; but since I see that you are in good earnest,
 ‘ and have infallibility of your side, I cannot forbear ‘ returning my thanks to you for the care you take of ‘ us, having a friend who has promised me to give my ‘ letters to the lion, until we can communicate our
 Vol. II. G thoughts thoughts to you through our own proper vehicle.

 ‘ Now you must know, dear Sir, that if you do not take ‘ care to suppress this exorbitant growth of the female ‘ chest, all that is left of my waste must inevitably ‘ perish. It is at this time reduced to the depth of four ‘ inches, by what I have already made over to my neck.
 ‘ But if the stripping design mentioned by Mrs. Fig-‘ leaf yesterday, should take effect, Sir, I dread to ‘ think what it will come to. In short, there is no ‘ help for it, my girdle and all must go. This is the ‘ naked truth of the matter. Have pity on me then,
 ‘ my dear GUARDIAN, and preserve me from being so ‘ inhumanly exposed. I do assure you that I follow your ‘ precepts as much as a young woman can, who will ‘ live in the world without being laughed at. I have ‘ no hooped petticoat, and when I am a matron will ‘ wear broad tuckers whether you succeed or no. If ‘ the flying project takes, I intend to be the last in ‘ wings, being resolved in every thing to behave myself ‘ as becomes your most obedient ward.

N^o 122

Friday, July 31.

Nec magis expressi vultus per aenea signa.

Hor. Ep. 1. l. 2. v. 248.

IMITATED.

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
 The forms august, of king, or conqu’ring chief,
 E’er swell’d on marble. POPE.

THAT I may get out of debt with the public as fast as I can, I shall here give them the remaining part of Strada’s criticism on the Latin heroic poets. My readers may see the whole work in the three papers numbered 115, 119, 122. Those who are acquainted with the authors themselves cannot but be pleased to see them so justly represented; and as for those who have who have never perused the originals, they may form a judgment of them from such accurate and entertaining copies. The whole piece will show at least how a man of genius (and none else should call himself a critic) can make the driest art a pleasing amusement.

The Sequel of STRADA's Prolusion.

The poet who personated Ovid, gives an account of the chryso-magnet, or of the loadstone, which attracts gold, after the same manner as the common loadstone attracts iron. The author, that he might express Ovid's way of thinking, derives this virtue to the chryso-magnet from a poetical metamorphosis.

As I was sitting by a well (says he) when I was a boy, my ring dropped into it, when immediately my father fastening a certain stone to the end of a line, let it down into the well. It no sooner touched the surface of the water, but the ring leaped up from the bottom, and clung to it in such a manner, that he drew it out like a fish. My father seeing me wonder at the experiment, gave me the following account of it. When Deucalion and Pyrrha went about the world to repair mankind by throwing stones over their heads; the men who rose from them differed in their inclinations according to the places on which the stones fell. Those which fell in the fields became plowmen and shepherds. Those which fell into the water produced sailors and fishermen. Those that fell among the woods and forests gave birth to huntsmen. Among the rest there were several that fell upon mountains that had mines of gold and silver in them. This last race of men immediately betook themselves to the search of these precious metals; but nature being displeased to see herself ranfacked, withdrew these her treasures towards the center of the earth. The avarice of man however persisted in its former pursuits, and ranfacked her inmost bowels in quest of the riches which they contained. Nature seeing herself thus plundered by a swarm of miners, was so highly incensed, that she shook the whole place with an earthquake, and buried the men under their own works. The Stygian flames, which lay in the neighbourhood bourhood of these deep mines, broke out at the same time with great fury, burning up the whole mass of human limbs and earth, until they were hardened and baked into stone. The human bodies that were delving in iron mines were converted into those common loadstones which attract that metal. Those which were in search of gold became chryso-magnets, and still keep their former avarice in their present state of petrefaction.

Ovid had no sooner given over speaking, but the assembly pronounced their opinions of him. Several were so taken with his easy way of writing, and had so formed their tastes upon it, that they had no relish for any composition which was not framed in the Ovidian manner. A great many, however, were of a contrary opinion; until at length it was determined by a plurality of voices, that Ovid highly deserved the name of a witty man, but that his language was vulgar and trivial, and of the nature of those things which cost no labour in the invention, but are ready found out to a man's hand. In the last place, they all agreed, that the greatest objection which lay against Ovid, both as to his life and writings, was his having too much wit, and that he would have succeeded better in both, had he rather checked than indulged it. Statius stood up next with a swelling and haughty air, and made the following story the subject of his poem.

A German and a Portuguese, when Vienna was besieged, having had frequent contests of rivalry, were preparing for a single duel, when on a sudden the walls were attacked by the enemy. Upon this both the German and Portuguese consented to sacrifice their private resentments to the public, and to see who could signalize himself most upon the common foe. Each of them did wonders in repelling the enemy from different parts of the wall. The German was at length engaged amidst a whole army of Turks until his left arm that held the shield was unfortunately lopped off, and he himself so stunned with a blow he had received, that he fell down as dead. The Portuguese seeing the condition of his rival, very generously flew to his succour, dispersed the multitude that were gathered about him, and fought over him as he lay upon the ground. In the mean while while the German recovered from his trance, and rose up to the assistance of the Portuguese, who a little after had his right arm, which held his sword, cut off by the blow of a sabre. He would have lost his life at the same time by a spear which was aimed at his back, had not the German slain the person who was aiming at him. These two competitors for fame having received such mutual obligations, now fought in conjunction, and as the one was only able to manage the sword, and the other a shield, made up but one warrior betwixt them. The Portuguese covered the German, while the German dealt destruction upon the enemy. At length finding themselves faint with loss of blood, and resolving to perish nobly, they advanced to the most shattered part of the wall, and threw themselves down, with a huge fragment of it, upon the heads of the besiegers.

When Statius ceased, the old factions immediately broke out concerning his manner of writing. Some gave him very loud acclamations, such as he had received in his life-time, declaring him the only man who had written in a stile which was truly heroical, and that he was above all others in his fame as well as in his diction. Others censured him as one who went beyond all bounds in his images and expressions, laughing at the cruelty of his conceptions, the rumbling of his numbers, and the dreadful pomp and bombast of his expressions. There were, however, a few select judges who moderated between both these extremes, and pronounced upon Statius, that there appeared in his stile much poetical heat and fire, but withal so much smoke as sullied the brightness of it. That there was a majesty in his verse, but that it was the majesty rather of a tyrant than of a king. That he was often towering among the clouds, but often met with the fate of Icarus. In a word, that Statius was among the poets, what Alexander the Great is among heroes, a man of great virtues and of great faults.

Virgil was the last of the ancient poets who produced himself upon this occasion. His subject was the story of Theutilla, which being so near that of Judith in all its circumstances, and at the same time translated by a very ingenious Gentleman in one of Mr. Dryden's miscellanies, I shall here give no further account of it. When he had done, the whole assembly declared the works of this great poet a subject rather for their admiration than for their applause, and that if any thing was wanting in Virgil's poetry, it was to be ascribed to a deficiency in the art itself, and not in the genius of this great man. There were, however, some envious murmurs and detractions heard among the crowd, as if there were very frequently verses in him which flagged or wanted spirit, and were rather to be looked upon as faultless than beautiful. But these injudicious censures were heard with a general indignation.

I need not observe to my learned reader, that the foregoing story of the German and Portuguese is almost the same in every particular with that of the two rival soldiers in Cæsar's Commentaries. This PROLUSION ends with the performance of an Italian poet full of those little witticisms and conceits which have infected the greatest part of modern poetry.

N^o 123 Saturday, August 1.

———*Hic murus abeneus esto,
Nil conscire sibi*———

Hor. Ep. 1. l. 1. v. 60.

IMITATED.

True, conscious honour, is to feel no sin:
He's arm'd without that's innocent within;
Be this thy screen, and this thy wall of brass. POPE.

THERE are a sort of knights-errant in the world, who, quite contrary to those in romance, are perpetually seeking adventures to bring virgins into distress, and to ruin innocence. When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in these criminal pursuits and practices, they ought to consider that they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune or

or birth have placed him in. Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one more contemptible.

Thy father's merit sets thee up to view,
And plants thee in the fairest point of light,
To make thy virtues, or thy faults, conspicuous. Cato.

I have often wondered, that these deflourers of innocence, though dead to all the sentiments of virtue and honour, are not restrained by compassion and humanity. To bring sorrow, confusion and infamy into a family, to wound the heart of a tender parent, and stain the life of a poor deluded young woman with a dishonour that can never be wiped off, are circumstances one would think sufficient to check the most violent passion in a heart which has the least tincture of pity and good-nature. Would any one purchase the gratification of a moment at so dear a rate? and entail a lasting misery on others, for such a transient satisfaction to himself; nay, for a satisfaction that is sure, at some time or other, to be followed with remorse? I am led to the subject by two letters which came lately to my hands. The last of them is, it seems, the copy of one sent by a mother to one who had abused her daughter; and though I cannot justify her sentiments at the latter end of it, they are such as might arise in a mind which had not yet recovered its temper after so great a provocation. I present the reader with it as I received it, because I think it gives a lively idea of the affliction which a fond parent suffers on such an occasion.

S I R,

—shire, July, 1713.

‘ THE other day I went into the house of one of ‘ my tenants, whose wife was formerly a servant
‘ in our family, and (by my grandmother's kindness)
‘ had her education with my mother from her infancy;
‘ so that she is of a spirit and understanding greatly ‘ superior to those of her own rank. I found the poor ‘ woman in the utmost disorder of mind and attire, ‘ drowned in tears, and reduced to a condition that ‘ looked rather like stupidity than grief. She leaned ‘ upon her arm over a table, on which lay a letter folded up and directed to a certain nobleman very famous in our parts for low intrigue, (or in plainer words) for debauching country girls; in which number is the unfortunate daughter of my poor tenant, as I learn from the following letter written by her mother. I have sent you here a copy of it, which, made publick in your paper, may perhaps furnish useful reflections to many men of figure and quality, who indulge themselves in a passion which they possess but in common with the vilest part of mankind.

My Lord,

“ Last night I discovered the injury you have done
“ to my daughter. Heaven knows how long and “ piercing a torment that short-liv’d shameful pleasure “ of yours must bring upon me; upon me, from whom “ you never received any offence. This consideration “ alone should have deterred a noble mind from so “ base and ungenerous an act. But, alas! what is all “ the grief that must be my share, in comparison of
“ of that, with which you have requited her by whom “ you have been obliged? Loss of good name, anguish
“ of heart, shame and infamy, are what must inevi“ tably fall upon her, unless she gets over them by “ what is much worse, open impudence, professed “ lewdness, and abandoned prostitution. These are the “ returns you have made to her, for putting in your “ power all her livelihood and dependence, her vir“ tue and reputation. O, my Lord, should my son
“ have practised the like on one of your daughters?
“ — I know you swell with indignation at the very “ mention of it, and would think he deserved a thou“ sand deaths, should he make such an attempt upon “ the honour of your family. It is well, my Lord. And “ is then the honour of your daughter, whom still, “ though it had been violated, you might have maintain“ ed in plenty and even luxury, of greater moment
“ to her, than to my daughter hers, whose only suste“ nance it was? And must my son, void of all the ad“ vantages of a generous education, must he, I say, “ consider: And may your Lordship be excused from “ all reflection? Eternal contumely attend that guilty “ title

“ title which claims exemption from thought, and “ arrogates to its wearers the prerogative of brutes.
“ Ever cursed be its false lustre, which could dazzle my “ poor daughter to her undoing. Was it for this that “ the exalted merits and godlike virtues of your great “ ancestor were honoured with a coronet, that it might “ be a pander to his posterity, and confer a privilege of “ dishonouring the innocent and defenceless? At this “ rate the laws of rewards should be inverted, and he “ who is generous and good should be made a beg-“ ger and a slave; that industry and honest diligence
“ may keep his posterity unspotted, and preserve them
“ from ruining virgins, and making whole families un“ happy. Wretchedness is now become my everlasting “ portion! Your crime, my Lord, will draw perdition “ even upon my head. I may not sue for forgiveness of “ my own failings and misdeeds, for I never can forgive “ yours; but shall curse you with my dying breath, and “ at the last tremendous day shall hold forth in my arms
“ my much wronged child, and call aloud for vengeance
“ on her defiler. Under these present horrors of mind
“ I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever “ paying you mock-reverence, and founding in your “ ears, to your unutterable loathing, the empty title “ which inspired you with presumption to tempt, and “ over-awed my daughter to comply.

“ Thus have I given some vent to my sorrow, nor “ fear I to awaken you to repentance, so that your sin
“ may be forgiven: The divine laws have been broken,
“ but much injury, irreparable injury, has been also done
“ to me, and the just judge will not pardon that until “ I do.

My Lord,

your conscience will help you to my name.

Nº 124

Monday, August 3.

Quid fremat in terris violentis? —

Juv. Sat. 8. v. 37.

What roar more dreadful in the world is heard?

More Roarings of the L I O N.

Mr. GUARDIAN.

‘ B Efore I proceed to make you my propofals, it will ‘ be neceffary to inform you, that an uncommon
 ‘ ferocity in my countenance, together with the re‘ markable flatnefs of my nofe, and extent of my mouth
 ‘ have long fince procured me the name of Lion in this ‘ our univerfity.

‘ The vaft emoluments that, in all probability, will ‘ accrue to the publick from the roarings of my new ‘ erected likenefs at Button’s, hath made me defirous of ‘ being as like him in that part of his character, as I ‘ am told I already am in all parts of my perfon. Where‘ fore I moft humbly propofe to you, that (as it is im‘ poffible for this one Lion to roar, either long enough or ‘ loud enough againft all things that are roar-worthy ‘ in thefe realms) you would appoint him a Sub-Lion, as ‘ a “præfectus provinciæ,” in every county in Great-‘ Britain; and it is my request, that I may be instituted ‘ his under-roarer in this univerfity, town and county of ‘ Cambridge, as my refemblance does, in fome meafure, ‘ claim that I fhould.

‘ I fhall follow my Metropolitan’s example, in roar‘ ing only againft thofe enormities that are too flight
 ‘ and trivial for the notice or cenfures of our magi‘ ftrates; and fhall communicate my roarings to him
 ‘ monthly, or oftener if occafion requires, to be inserted ‘ in your papers “cum privilegio.”

‘ I fhall not omit giving informations of the improve‘ ment or decay of punning, and may chance to touch
 ‘ upon the rife and fall of tuckers; but I will roar ‘ aloud

‘ aloud and spare not, to the terror of, at present, a ‘ very flourishing society of people called Lowngers, ‘ gentlemen whose observations are mostly itinerant, and ‘ who think they have already too much good sense of ‘ their own, to be in need of staying at home to read
 ‘ other peoples.

‘ I have, Sir, a Raven that will serve, by way of ‘ Jackall, to bring me in provisions, which I shall chew
 ‘ and prepare for the digestion of my principal; and I ‘ do hereby give notice, to all under my jurisdiction, that ‘ whoever are willing to contribute to this good design,
 ‘ if they will affix their information to the leg or neck
 ‘ of the aforesaid Raven or Jackall, they will be thank‘ fully received by their (but more particularly your) humble servant,

From my den at — College in Cambridge,
 July 29.

LEO the Second.

N. B. The Raven will not bite.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

‘ HEaring that your Unicorn is now in hand, and ‘ not questioning but his horn will prove a Cornu- ‘ copia to you, I desire that in order to introduce it, you ‘ will consider the following proposal.

‘ My wife and I intend a desertation upon Horns;
 ‘ the province she has chosen is, the planting of them,
 ‘ and I am to treat of their growth, improvement, &c.
 ‘ The work is like to swell so much upon our hands, that ‘ I am afraid we shall not be able to bear the charge of ‘ printing without a subscription; wherefore I hope you ‘ will invite the city into it, and desire those who have ‘ any thing by them relating to that part of natural ‘ history, to communicate it to, your humble servants,

S I R,

HUMPHRY BINICORN.

S I R,

S I R,

‘ I Humbly beg leave to drop a song into your Lion’s ‘ mouth, which will very truly make him roar like ‘ any Nightingale. It is fallen into my hands by chance,
‘ and is a very fine imitation of the works of many of ‘ our English lyricks. It cannot but be highly accept‘ able to all those who admire the translations of ‘ Italian Operas.

I.

Oh the charming month of May!
Oh the charming month of May!
When the breezes fan the trees
Full of blossoms fresh and gay——
Full, &c.

II.

Oh what joys our prospects yield!
Charming joys our prospects yield!
In a new livery when we see every Bush and meadow, tree and field——
Bush, &c.

III.

Oh how fresh the morning air!
Charming fresh the morning air!
When the zephyrs and the heifers
Their odoriferous breath compare——
Their, &c.

IV.

Oh how fine our evening walk!
Charming fine our evening walk!
When the nightingale delighting;
With her song, suspends our talk——
With her, &c.

V.

Oh how sweet at night to dream!
Charming sweet at night to dream!
On mossy pillows, by the trilloes
Of a gentle purling stream——
Of a, &c.

VI.

Oh how kind the country las!
 Charming kind the country las!
 Who, her cow bilking, leaves her milking
 For a green gown on the grass——
 For a, &c.

VII.

Oh how sweet it is to spy!
 Charming sweet it is to spy!
 At the conclusion, her confusion,
 Blushing cheeks, and down-cast eye——
 Blushing, &c.

VIII.

Oh the cooling curds and cream!
 Charming cooling curds and cream!
 When all is over, she gives her lover,
 Who on her skimming dish carves her name——
 Who on, &c.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

July 30.

‘ I Have always been very much pleased with the ‘ sight of those creatures, which being of a foreign ‘ growth, are brought into our island for show. I ‘ may say, there has not been a tyger, leopard, ele‘ phant or hyghgeen, for some years past, in this ‘ nation, but I have taken their particular dimensions,
 ‘ and am able to give a very good description of them.
 ‘ But I must own, I never had a greater curiosity to ‘ visit any of these strangers than your Lion. Accord‘ ingly I came yesterday to town, being able to wait
 ‘ no longer for fair weather, and made what haste I ‘ could to Mr. Button’s, who readily conducted me to ‘ his den of state. He is really a creature of as noble
 ‘ a presence as I have seen; he has grandeur and good-‘ humour in his countenance, which command both ‘ our love and respect; his shaggy main and whiskers
 ‘ are peculiar graces. In short, I do not question
 ‘ but he will prove a worthy supporter of the British ‘ honour and virtue, especially when assisted by the ‘ Unicorn: You must think I would not wait upon him ‘ without

‘ without a morsel to gain his favour, and had provided
 ‘ what I hope would have pleased, but was unluckily
 ‘ prevented by the presence of a bear, which constantly, ‘ as I approached with my present, threw his eyes in ‘ my way, and stared me out of my resolution. I must ‘ not forget to tell you, my younger daughter and your ‘ ward is hard at work about her tucker, having never ‘ from her infancy laid aside the modesty-piece.

I am,

venerable NESTOR,

your friend and servant,

P. N.

‘ I was a little surprized, having read some of your ‘ Lion’s Roaring’s, that a creature of such eloquence ‘ should want a tongue, but he has other qualifications ‘ which make good that deficiency.

N^o 125 Tuesday, August 4.

—Nunc formosissimus annus. Virg. Ecl. 3. v. 57.

Now the gay year in all her charms is drest.

MEN of my age receive a greater pleasure from fine weather, than from any other sensual enjoyment of life. In spite of the auxiliary bottle, or any artificial heat, we are apt to droop under a gloomy sky; and taste no luxury like a blue firmament and sun-shine. I have often, in a splenetick fit, wished myself a dormouse, during the winter; and I never see one of those snug animals, wrapt up close in his fur, and compactly happy in himself, but I contemplate him with envy beneath the dignity of a philosopher. If the art of flying were brought to perfection, the use that I should make of it would be to attend the sun round the world, and pursue the spring through every sign of the Zodiac.

This

This love of warmth makes my heart glad at the return of the spring. How amazing is the change in the face of nature ; when the earth, from being bound with frost, or covered with snow, begins to put forth her plants and flowers, to be clothed with green, diversified with ten thousand various dyes ; and to exhale such fresh and charming odours, as fill every living creature with delight !

Full of thoughts like these, I make it a rule to lose as little as I can of that blessed season ; and accordingly rise with the sun, and wander through the fields, throw myself on the banks of little rivulets, or lose myself in the woods. I spent a day or two this spring at a country gentleman's seat, where I feasted my imagination every morning with the most luxurious prospect I ever saw. I usually took my stand by the wall of an old castle built upon an high hill. A noble river ran at the foot of it, which after being broken by a heap of misshapen stones, glided away in a clear stream, and wandering through two woods on each side of it in many windings, shone here and there at a great distance through the trees. I could trace the mazes for some miles, until my eye was led through two ridges of hills, and terminated by a vast mountain in another county.

I hope the reader will pardon me for taking his eye from our present subject of the spring, by this landscape, since it is at this time of the year only that prospects excel in beauty. But if the eye is delighted, the ear hath likewise its proper entertainment. The musick of the birds at this time of the year, hath something in it so wildly sweet, as makes me less relish the most elaborate compositions of Italy. The vigour which the warmth of the sun pours afresh into their veins, prompts them to renew their species ; and thereby puts the male upon wooing his mate, with more mellow warblings, and to swell his throat with more violent modulations. It is an amusement by no means below the dignity of a rational soul, to observe the pretty creatures flying in pairs, to mark the different passions in their intrigues, the curious contexture of their nests, and their care and tenderness of their little offspring.

I am

I am particularly acquainted with a wagtail and his spouse, and made many remarks upon the several gallantries he hourly used, before the coy female would consent to make him happy. When I saw in how many airy rings he was forced to pursue her; how sometimes she tripped before him in a pretty pitty-pat step, and scarce seemed to regard the cowering of his wings, and the many aukward and foppish contortions into which he put his body to do her homage, it made me reflect upon my own youth, and the caprices of the fair but fantastic Teraminta. Often have I wished that I understood the language of birds, when I have heard him exert an eager chuckle at her leaving him; and do not doubt, but that he muttered the same vows and reproaches which I often have vented against that unrelenting maid.

The sight that gave me the most satisfaction was a flight of young birds, under the conduct of the father, and indulgent directions and assistance of the dam. I took particular notice of a beau gold-finch, who was picking his plumes, pruning his wings, and, with great diligence, adjusting all his gaudy garniture. When he had equipt himself with great trimness and nicety, he stretched his painted neck, which seemed to brighten with new glowings, and strained his throat into many wild notes and natural melody. He then flew about the nest in several circles and windings, and invited his wife and children into open air. It was very entertaining to see the trembling and the fluttering of the little strangers, at their first appearance in the world, and the different care of the male and female parent, so suitable to their several sexes. I could not take my eye quickly from so entertaining an object; nor could I help wishing, that creatures of a superior rank, would so manifest their mutual affection, and so chearfully concur in providing for their offspring.

I shall conclude this tattle about the spring, which I usually call "the youth and health of the year," with some verses which I transcribe from a manuscript poem upon hunting. The author gives directions, that hounds should breed in the spring, whence he takes occasion, after the manner of the ancients, to make a di-

a digression in praise of that season. The verses here subjoined, are not all upon that subject; but the transitions slide so easily into one another, that I knew not how to leave off, until I had writ out the whole digression.

In spring, let loose thy males. Then all things prove
The stings of pleasure, and the pangs of love:
Æthereal Jove then glads, with genial showers,
Earth's mighty womb, and strows her lap with flow'rs;
Hence juices mount, and buds, embolden'd, try
More kindly breezes, and a softer sky:
Kind Venus revels. Hark! on ev'ry bough,
In lulling strains the feather'd warblers woo.
Fell tygers soften in th' infectious flames,
And lions fawning, court their brinded dames:
Great love pervades the deep; to please his mate,
The whale, in gambols, moves his monstrous weight:
Heav'd by his wayward mirth old Ocean roars,
And scatter'd navies bulge on distant shores.

All nature smiles: Come now, nor fear, my love,
To taste the odours of the wood-bine grove,
To pass the evening glooms in harmless play,
And, sweetly swearing, languish life away.
An altar bound, with recent flowers, I rear
To thee, best season of the various year:
All hail! such days in beauteous order ran,
So soft, so sweet, when first the world began;
In Eden's bow'rs, when man's great Sire assign'd
The names and natures of the brutal kind.
Then lamb and lion friendly walk'd their round,
And hares, undaunted, lick'd the fondling hound;
Wond'rous to tell! but when with luckless hand,
Our daring mother broke the sole command,
Then want and envy brought their meagre train,
Then wrath came down, and death had leave to reign:
Hence foxes earth'd, and wolves abhor'd the day,
And hungry churls ensnar'd the nightly prey.
Rude arts at first; but witty want refin'd
The huntsman's wiles, and famine form'd the mind.

Bold Nimrod first the lions trophies wore,
 The panther bound, and lanc'd the bristling boar;
 He taught to turn the hare, to bay the deer,
 And wheel the courser in his mid career:
 Ah! had he there restrain'd his tyrant hand!
 Let me, ye pow'rs, an humbler wreath demand:
 No pomps I ask, which crowns and scepters yield;
 Nor dang'rous laurels in the dusty field;
 Fast by the forest, and the limped spring,
 Give me the warfare of the woods to sing,
 To breed my whelps, and healthful press the game,
 A mean, inglorious, but a guiltless name.

N^o 126 Wednesday, August 5.

Homo sum, humani nihil à me alienum puto.

Ter. Heaut. Act. 1. Sc. 1.

I am a man, and have a fellow-feeling of every thing belonging to man.

IF we consider the whole scope of the creation that lies within our view, the moral and intellectual, as well as the natural and corporeal; we shall perceive, throughout, a certain correspondence of the parts, a similitude of operation and unity of design, which plainly demonstrate the universe to be the work of one infinitely good and wise Being; and that the system of thinking beings is actuated by laws derived from the same divine power, which ordained those by which the corporeal system is upheld.

From the contemplation of the order, motion and cohesion of natural bodies, philosophers are now agreed, that there is a mutual attraction between the most distant parts at least of this solar system. All those bodies that revolve round the sun are drawn towards each other, and towards the sun, by some secret, uniform and never-ceasing principle. Hence it is, that the earth (as well as the other planets) without flying off in a tangent line, con-

constantly rolls about the sun, and the moon about the earth, without deserting her companion in so many thousand years. And as the larger systems of the universe are held together by this cause, so likewise the particular globes derive their cohesion and consistence from it.

Now if we carry our thoughts from the corporeal to the moral world, we may observe in the spirits or minds of men, a like principle of attraction, whereby they are drawn together in communities, clubs, families, friendships, and all the various species of society. As in bodies, where the quantity is the same, the attraction is strongest between those which are placed nearest to each other; so it is likewise in the minds of men, cæteris paribus," between those which are most nearly related. Bodies that are placed at the distance of many millions of miles, may nevertheless attract and constantly operate on each other, although this action do not shew itself by an union or approach of those distant bodies so long as they are withheld by the contrary forces of other bodies, which, at the same time, attract them different ways; but would, on the supposed removal of all other bodies, mutually approach and unite with each other. The like holds with regard to the human soul, whose affection towards the individuals of the same species, who are distantly related to it, is rendered inconspicuous by its more powerful attraction towards those who have a nearer relation to it. But as those are removed, the tendency which before lay concealed doth gradually disclose itself.

A man who has no family is more strongly attracted towards his friends and neighbours; and, if absent from these, he naturally falls into an acquaintance with those of his own city or country who chance to be in the same place. Two Englishmen meeting at Rome or Constantinople, soon run into a familiarity. And in China or Japan, Europeans would think their being so, a good reason for their uniting in particular converse. Farther, in case we suppose ourselves translated into Jupiter or Saturn, and there to meet a Chinese or other more distant native of our own planet, we should look on him as a near relation, and readily commence a friendship with him. These are natural reflections, and such as may convince us that we are linked by an imperceptible chain to every individual of the human race.
with

The several great bodies which compose the solar system are kept from joining together at the common center of gravity by the rectilinear motions the author of nature has impressed on each of them; which, concurring with the attractive principle, form their respective orbits round the sun: upon the ceasing of which motions, the general law of gravitation that is now thwarted, would shew itself by drawing them all into one mass. After the same manner, in the parallel case of society, private passions and motions of the soul do often obstruct the operation of that benevolent uniting instinct implanted in human nature; which notwithstanding doth still exert, and will not fail to shew itself when those obstructions are taken away.

The mutual gravitation of bodies cannot be explained any other way than by resolving it into the immediate operation of God, who never ceases to dispose and actuate his creatures in a manner suitable to their respective beings. So neither can that reciprocal attraction in the minds of men be accounted for by any other cause. It is not the result of education, law, or fashion; but is a principle originally ingrafted in the very first formation of the soul by the author of our nature.

And as the attractive power in bodies is the most universal principle which produceth innumerable effects, and is a key to explain the various phænomena of nature; so the corresponding social appetite in human souls is the great spring and source of moral actions. This it is that inclines each individual to an intercourse with his species, and models every one to that behaviour which best suits with the common well-being. Hence that sympathy in our nature, whereby we feel the pains and joys of our fellow-creatures. Hence that prevalent love in parents towards their children, which is neither founded on the merit of the object, nor yet on self-interest. It is this that makes us inquisitive concerning the affairs of distant nations, which can have no influence on our own. It is this that extends extends our care to future generations, and excites us to acts of beneficence towards those who are not yet in being, and consequently from whom we can expect no recompence. In a word, hence arises that diffusive sense of humanity so unaccountable to the selfish man who is untouched with it, and is indeed a sort of monster or anomalous production.

These thoughts do naturally suggest the following particulars : first, That as social inclinations are absolutely necessary to the well-being of the world, it is the duty and interest of each individual to cherish and improve them to the benefit of mankind ; the duty, because it is agreeable to the intention of the Author of our being, who aims at the common good of his creatures, and as an indication of his will, hath implanted the seeds of mutual benevolence in our souls ; the interest, because the good of the whole is inseparable from that of the parts ; in promoting therefore the common good, every one doth at the same time promote his own private interest. Another observation I shall draw from the premises is, That it makes a signal proof of the divinity of the christian religion, that the main duty which it inculcates above all others is charity. Different maxims and precepts have distinguished the different sects of philosophy and religion ; our Lord's peculiar precept is, " Love thy neighbour as thyself. By this shall all " men know that you are my disciples, if you love one " another."

I will not say, that what is a most shining proof of our religion, is not often a reproach to its professors : but this I think very plain, that whether we regard the analogy of nature, as it appears in the mutual attraction or gravitations of the mundane system ; in the general frame and constitution of the human soul ; or lastly, in the ends and aptnesses which are discoverable in all parts of the visible and intellectual world ; we shall not doubt but the precept, which is the characteristic of our religion, came from the Author of nature. Some of our modern Free-Thinkers would indeed insinuate the christian morals to be defective, because (say they) there is no mention made in the gospel of the virtue of friendship. These sagacious men (if I may be allowed the use of that vulgar saying) “cannot see the wood for trees.” That a religion, whereof the main drift is to inspire its professors with the most noble and disinterested spirit of love, charity, and beneficence to all mankind; or, in other words, with a friendship to every individual man; should be taxed with the want of that very virtue, is surely a glaring evidence of the blindness and prejudice of its adversaries.
use

N^o 127 Thursday, August 6.

Lusit amabiliter——

He sported agreeably.

AN agreeable young gentleman, that has a talent for poetry, and does me the favour to entertain me with his performances after my more serious studies, read me yesterday the following translation. In this town, where there are so many women of prostituted charms, I am very glad when I gain so much time of reflection from a youth of a gay turn, as is taken up in any composition, though the piece he writes is not foreign to that his natural inclination. For it is a great step towards gaining upon the passions, that there is a delicacy in the choice of their object; and to turn the imaginations towards a bride, rather than a mistress, is getting a great way towards being in the interests of virtue. It is an hopeless manner of reclaiming youth which has been practised by some moralists, to declaim against pleasure in general: No; the way is to shew, that the pleasurable course is that which is limited and governed by reason. In this case virtue is upon equal terms with vice, and has, with all the same indulgences of desire, the advantage of safety in honour and reputation. I have for this reason often thought of exercising my pupils, of whom I have several of admirable talents, upon writing little poems, or epigrams, which in a volume I would entitle The Seeing Cupid. These compositions should be written on the little advances made towards towards a young Lady of the strictest virtue, and all the circumstances alluded to in them, should have something that might please her mind in its purest innocence, as well as celebrated her person in its highest beauty. This work would instruct a woman to be a good wife, all the while it is a wooing her to be a bride. Imagination and reason should go hand in hand in a generous amour; for when it is otherwise, real discontent and aversion in marriage, succeed the groundless and wild promise of imagination in courtship.

The court of Venus from Claudian, being part of the Epithalamium on Honorius and Maria.

IN the fam'd Cyprian isle a mountain stands,
That casts a shadow into distant lands.
In vain access by human feet is try'd,
Its lofty brow looks down with noble pride
On bounteous Nile, thro' seven wide channels spread;
And sees old Proteus in his oozy bed.
Along its sides no hoary frosts presume
To blast the myrtle shrubs, or nip the bloom.
The winds with caution sweep the rising flow'rs,
While balmy dews descend, and vernal show'rs.
The ruling orbs no wintry horrors bring,
Fix'd in th' indulgence of eternal spring.
Unfading sweets in purple scenes appear,
And genial breezes soften all the year.
The nice, luxurious soul, uncloy'd may rove;
From pleasures still to circling pleasures move;
For endless beauty kindles endless love. }

The mountain, when the summit once you gain,
Falls by degrees, and sinks into a plain;
Where the pleas'd eye may flow'ry meads behold,
Inclos'd with branching oar, and hedg'd with gold:
Or where large crops the gen'rous glebe supplies,
And yellow harvests, unprovok'd, arise.
For by mild zephyrs fann'd, the teeming soil
Yields ev'ry grain, nor asks the peasant's toil.
These were the bribes, the price of heav'nly charms;
These Cytherea won to Vulcan's arms:

For

For such a bliss he such a gift bestow'd;
The rich, th' immortal labours of a god.

A sylvan scene, in solemn state display'd,
Flatters each feather'd warbler with a shade;
But here no bird its painted wings can move,
Unless elected by the queen of love.
Ere made a member of this tuneful throng,
She hears the songster, and approves the song:
The joyous victors hop from spray to spray;
The vanquish'd fly with mournful notes away.

Branches in brances twin'd, compose the grove;
And shoot, and spread, and blossom into love.
The trembling palms their mutual vows repeat;
And bending poplars bending poplars meet:
The distant plantanes seem to press more nigh;
And to the sighing alder, alders sigh.
Blue heav'ns above them smile; and, all below,
Two murm'ring streams in wild meanders flow.
This, mix'd with gall; and that, like honey, sweet:
But ah! too soon th' unfriendly waters meet!
Steep'd in these springs (if verse belief can gain)
The darts of love their double pow'r attain:
Hence all mankind a bitter sweet have found,
A painful pleasure, and a grateful wound.

Along the grassy banks, in bright array,
Ten thousand little loves their wings display:
Quivers and bows their usual sports proclaim;
Their dress, their stature, and their looks the same;
Smiling in innocence, and ever young,
And tender, as the nymphs from whom they sprung.
For Venus did but boast one only son,
And rosy Cupid was that boasted one;
He, uncontroll'd, thro' heav'n extends his sway,
And gods and goddesses by turns obey:
Or if he stoops on earth, great princes burn,
Sicken on thrones, and wreath'd with laurels mourn.
Th' inferior pow'rs o'er hearts inferior reign,
And pierce the rural fair, or homely swain.

Here love's imperial pomp is spread around,
Voluptuous liberty that knows no bound ;
And sudden storms of wrath, which soon decline ;
And midnight watchings o'er the fumes of wine :
Unartful tears and hectic looks, that show
With silent eloquence the lover's woe ;
Boldness unfledg'd, and to stol'n raptures new,
Half trembling stands, and scarcely dares pursue :
Fears, that delight, and anxious doubts of joy,
Which check our swelling hopes, but not destroy ;
And short-breath'd vows, forgot as soon as made,
On airy pinions flutter thro' the glade.
Youth with a haughty look, and gay attire,
And rolling eyes, that glow with soft desire,
Shines forth exalted on a pompous seat ;
While fullen cares, and wither'd age retreat.

Now from afar the palace seems to blaze,
And hither would extend its golden rays ;
But by reflection of the grove is seen
The gold still vary'd by a waving green.
For Mulciber with secret pride beheld,
How far his skill all human wit excell'd ;
And, grown uxorious, did the work design
To speak the artist, and the art divine.
Proud columns, tow'ring high, support the frame,
That hewn from Hyacinthian quarries came.
The beams are em'rals, and yet scarce adorn
The ruby walls, on which themselves are born.
The pavement, rich with veins of agate lies ;
And steps, with shining jasper slipp'ry, rise.

Here spices in parterres promiscuous blow,
Not from Arabia's fields more odours flow ;
The wanton winds thro' groves of Cassia play,
And steal the ripen'd fragrances away,
Here with its load the wild amomum bends ;
There cinnamon, in rival sweets, contends ;
A rich perfume the ravish'd senses fills,
While from the weeping tree the balm distils.

At these delightful bow'rs arrives at last
The god of love, a tedious journey past ;

'Then shapes his way to reach the fronting gate,
Doubles his majesty, and walks in state.
It chanc'd, upon a radant throne reclin'd,
Venus her golden tresses did unbind:
Proud to be thus employ'd, on either hand
Th' Idalian sisters, rang'd in order, stand.
Ambrosial essence one bestows in showr's,
And lavishly whole streams of nectar pours;
With Iv'ry combs another's dext'rous care
Or curls, or opens the dishevel'd hair;
A third, industrious with a nicer eye,
Instructs the ringlets in what form to lie:
Yet leaves some few, that, not so closely prest,
Sport in the wind, and wanton from the rest.
Sweet negligence! by artful study wrought,
A graceful error, and a lovely fault.
The judgment of the glass is here unknown;
Here mirrors are supply'd by ev'ry stone.
Where'er the goddess turns, her image falls,
And a new Venus dances on the walls.
Now while she did her spotless form survey,
Pleas'd with love's empire, and almighty sway;
She spy'd her son, and fir'd with eager joy
Sprung forwards, and embrac'd the fav'rite boy.

N^o 128 Friday, August 7.

Delenda est Carthago —————

Demolish Carthage.

IT is usually thought, with great justice, a very impertinent thing in a private man to intermeddle in matters which regard the state. But the memorial which is mentioned in the following letter is so daring, and so apparently designed for the most traiterous purpose imaginable, that I do not care what misinterpretation I suffer, when I expose it to the resentment of all men who value their country, or have any regard to
the

the honour, safety, or glory of their Queen. It is certain there is not much danger in delaying the demolition of Dunkirk during the life of his present most christian majesty, who is renowned for the most inviolable regard to treaties; but that pious prince is aged, and in case of his decease, now the power of France and Spain is in the same family, it is possible an ambitious successor, (or his ministry in a king's minority) might dispute his being bound by the act of his predecessor in so weighty a particular.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

‘ YOU imploy your important moments, methinks,
 ‘ a little too frivolously, when you consider so ‘ often little circumstances of dress and behaviour, and ‘ never make mention of matters wherein you and all ‘ your fellow-subjects in general are concerned. I give ‘ you now an opportunity, not only of manifesting your ‘ loyalty to your Queen, but your affection to your ‘ country, if you treat an insolence done to them both
 ‘ with the disdain it deserves. The inclosed printed ‘ paper in French and English has been handed about
 ‘ the town, and given gratis to passengers in the streets
 ‘ at noon-day. You see the title of it is, “ A most ‘ humble address, or memorial, presented to her ‘ majesty the Queen of Great-Britain, by the deputy
 ‘ of the magistrates of Dunkirk.” The nauseous me‘ morialist, with the most fulsome flattery tells the Queen
 ‘ of her thunder, and of wisdom and clemency adored
 ‘ by all the earth; at the same time that he attempts ‘ to undermine her power, and escape her wisdom, by ‘ beseeching her to do an act which will give a well-‘ grounded jealousy to her people. What the syco‘ phant desires is, That the mole and dykes of Dunkirk
 ‘ may be spared; and it seems, the Sieur Tugghe, for ‘ so the petitioner is called, was thunderstruck by the ‘ denunciation (which he says) “ the lord viscount ‘ Bolingbroke made to him,” That her Majesty did ‘ not think to make any alteration in the dreadful ‘ sentence she had pronounced against the town. Mr.
 ‘ IRONSIDE, I think you would do an act worthy your ‘ general humanity, if you would put the Sieur Tugghe

‘ right in this matter; and let him know, That her ‘ Majesty has pronounced no sentence against the town
‘ but his most christian majesty has agreed that the ‘ town and harbour shall be demolished.

‘ That the British nation expect the immediate demolition of it.

‘ That the very common people know, that within ‘ three months after the signing of the peace, the works ‘ towards the sea, were to be demolished; and, within ‘ three months after it, the works towards the land.”

‘ That the said peace was signed the last of March,
‘ O. S.

‘ That the parliament has been told from the Queen,
‘ that the equivalent for it is in the hands of the French ‘ king.

‘ That the Sieur Tugghe has the impudence to ask
‘ the Queen to remit the most material part of the articles of peace between her Majesty and his master.

‘ That the British nation received more damage in ‘ their trade from the port of Dunkirk, than from ‘ almost all the ports of France, either in the ocean or ‘ in the Mediterranean.

‘ That fleets of above thirty sail have come together
‘ out of Dunkirk, during the late war, and taken ships
‘ of war as well as merchant-men.

‘ That the Pretender sailed from thence to Scotland;
‘ and that it is the only port the French have until you ‘ come to Brest, for the whole length of St. George’s ‘ channel, where any considerable naval armament can ‘ be made.

‘ That destroying the fortifications of Dunkirk is an ‘ inconsiderable advantage to England, in comparison ‘ to the advantage of destroying the mole, dikes and ‘ harbour; it being the naval force from thence which ‘ only can hurt the British nation.

‘ That the British nation expect the immediate demolition of Dunkirk.

‘ That the Dutch, who suffered equally with us from ‘ those of Dunkirk, were probably induced to sign the ‘ treaty with France from this consideration, That the ‘ town and harbour of Dunkirk should be destroyed.

‘ That

‘ That the situation of Dunkirk is such, as that it ‘ may always keep runners to observe all ships sailing
‘ on the Thames and Medway.

‘ That all the suggestions, which the Sieur Tugghe
‘ brings concerning the Dutch, are false and scandalous.

‘ That whether it may be advantageous to the trade
‘ of Holland or not, that Dunkirk should be demolished;
‘ it is necessary for the safety, honour and liberty of ‘ England, that it should be so.

‘ That when Dunkirk is demolished, the power of ‘ France, on that side, should it ever be turned against ‘ us, will be removed several hundred miles further off
‘ of Great-Britain than it is at present.

‘ That after the demolition, there can be no conside‘ rable preparation made at sea by the French on all ‘ the channel, but at Brest; and that Great-Britain being ‘ an island, which cannot be attacked but by a naval ‘ power, we may esteem France effectually removed,
‘ by the demolition, from Great-Britain, as far as the ‘ distance from Dunkirk to Brest.

‘ Pray, Mr. IRONSIDE, repeat this last particular, and ‘ put it in a different letter, That the demolition of Dun-
‘ kirk will remove France many hundred miles farther off
‘ from us; and then repeat again, that the British nation
‘ expects the demolition of Dunkirk.

‘ I demand of you, as you love and honour your ‘ Queen and country, that you insert this letter, or speak
‘ to this purpose, your own way; for in this all parties ‘ must agree, that however bound in friendship one ‘ nation is with another, it is but prudent that in case ‘ of a rupture, they should be, if possible, upon equal ‘ terms.

‘ Be honest, old NESTOR, and say all this; for what‘ ever half-witted hot whigs may think, we all value
‘ our estates and liberties, and every true man of each ‘ party must think himself concerned that Dunkirk should ‘ be demolished.

‘ It lies upon all who have the honour to be in the ‘ ministry to hasten this matter, and not let the credulity
‘ of an honest brave people be thus infamously abused
‘ in our open streets.

‘ I cannot go on for indignation : but pray God that ‘ our mercy to France may not expose us to the mercy ‘ of France.

Your humble servant,

ENGLISH TORRY.

N^o 129 Saturday, August 8.

— Animaſque in vulnere ponunt

Virg. Georg. 4. v. 238.

And part with life, only to wound their foe.

ANGER is ſo uneasy a gueſt in the heart, that he may be ſaid to be born unhappy who is of a rough and choleric diſpoſition. The moralifts have defined it to be “ a deſire of revenge for ſome injury “ offered.” Men of hot and heady tempers are eagerly deſirous of vengeance, the very moment they apprehend themſelves injured : Whereas the cool and ſedate watch proper opportunities to return grief for grief to their enemy. By this means it often happens that the choleric inflict diſproportioned puniſhments, upon flight, and ſometimes imaginary offences : But the temperately revengeful have leiſure to weigh the merits of the cauſe and thereby either to ſmother their ſecret reſentments, or to ſeek proper and adequate reparations for the damages they have ſuſtained. Weak minds are apt to ſpeak well of the man of fury ; becauſe, when the ſtorm is over, he is full of ſorrow and repentance : But the truth is, he is apt to commit ſuch ravages during his madneſs, that when he comes to himſelf, he becomes tame then, for the ſame reaſon that he ran wild before, “ only to give himſelf eaſe ;” and is a friend only to himſelf in both extremities. Men of this unhappy make, more frequently than any others, expect that their friends ſhould bear with their infirmities. Their friends ſhould in return deſire them to correct their infirmities.

The

The common excuses, that they cannot help it, that it was soon over, that they harbour no malice in their hearts, are arguments for pardoning a bull or a mastiff; but shall never reconcile me to an intellectual savage. Why, indeed, should any one imagine, that persons, independent upon him, should venture into his society, who hath not yet so far subdued his boiling blood, but that he is ready to do something, the next minute, which he can never repair; and hath nothing to plead in his own behalf, but that he is apt to do mischief as fast as he can? Such a man may be feared, he may be pitied, he can never be loved.

I would not hereby be so understood, as if I meant to recommend slow and deliberate malice: I would only observe, that men of moderation are of a more amiable character than the rash and inconsiderate; but if they do not husband the talent that heaven hath bestowed upon them, they are as much more odious than the cholerick, as the devil is more horrible than a brute. It is hard to say which of the two, when injured, is more troublesome to himself, or more hurtful to his enemy; the one is boisterous and gentle by fits, dividing his life between guilt and repentance, now all tempest, again all sun-shine: The other hath a smother, but more lasting anguish, lying under a perpetual gloom; the latter is a cowardly man, the former a generous beast. If he may be held unfortunate who cannot be sure but that he may do something the next minute which he shall lament during his life; what shall we think of him, who hath a soul so infected, that he can never be happy until he hath made another miserable? What wars may we imagine perpetually raging in his breast? What dark stratagems, unworthy designs, inhuman wishes, dreadful resolutions! A snake curled in many intricate mazes, ready to sting a traveller, and to hiss him in the pangs of death, is no unfit emblem of such an artful unsearchable projector. Were I to choose an enemy, whether should I wish for one that would stab me suddenly; or one that would give me an Italian poison, subtle and lingring, yet as certainly fatal as the stroke of a stiletto: Let the reader determine the doubt in his own mind.

There is yet a third sort of revenge, if it may be called a third, which is compounded of the other two: I mean the mistaken honour which hath too often a place in generous breasts. Men of good education, though naturally choleric, restrain their wrath so far as to seek convenient times for vengeance. The single combat seems so generous a way of ending controversies, that until we have stricter laws, the number of widows and orphans, and I wish I could not say, of wretched spirits, will be increased. Of all the medals which have been struck in honour of a neighbouring monarch, there is not one which can give him so true renown as that upon the success of his edicts for ‘abolishing the impious practice of duelling.’

What inclined me at present to write upon this subject, was the sight of the following letters, which I can assure the reader to be genuine. They concern two noble names among us; but the crime of which the gentlemen are guilty, bears too prevalently the name of honour, to need an apology to their relations for reviving the mention of their duel. But the dignity of wrath, and the cool and deliberate preparation (by passing different climes, and waiting convenient seasons) for murdering each other; when we consider them as moved by a sense of honour, must raise in the reader as much compassion as horror.

A Monsieur Monsieur SACKVILLE.

‘I That am in France hear how much you attribute to ‘yourself in this time, that I have given the world ‘leave to wring your praises * * * * *
 ‘If you call to memory, whereas I gave you my hand
 ‘last, I told you I reserved the heart for a truer recon‘ciliation. Now be that noble gentlemen, my love once ‘spoke you, and come and do him right that could ‘recite the trials you owe your birth and country, were I
 ‘not confident your honour gives you the same courage
 ‘to do me right, that it did to do me wrong. Be ma‘ster of your own weapons and time; the place where-‘soever I will wait on you. By doing this you shall shorten ‘revenge, and clear the idle opinion the world hath of ‘both our worths.

ED. BRUCE.

A Mr. Monsieur le Baron de Kinlofs.

‘ AS it shall be always far from me to seek a quarrel,
 ‘ so will I always be ready to meet with any that ‘ desire to make trial of my valour by so fair a course
 ‘ as you require. A witness whereof yourself shall be,
 ‘ who within a month shall receive a strict account of ‘ time, place and weapon, where you shall find me ready ‘ disposed to give you honourable satisfaction by him ‘ that shall conduct you thither. In the mean time be ‘ as secret of the appointment as it seems you are desi‘ rous of it.

ED. SACKVILLE.

A Mr. Monsieur le Baron de Kinlofs.

‘ I Am ready at Tergoso, a town in Zealand, to give ‘ you that satisfaction your sword can render you, ‘ accompanied with a worthy Gentleman my second, in ‘ degree a knight; and for your coming I will not ‘ limit you a peremptory day, but desire you to make a ‘ definite and speedy repair for your own honour, and ‘ fear of prevention, until which time you shall find me
 ‘ there. Tergoso, 10th of August, 1613.

ED. SACKVILLE.

A Mr. Monsieur SACKVILLE.

‘ I Have received your letter by your man, and acknow‘ ledge you have dealt nobly with me, and now I ‘ come with all possible haste to meet you.

ED. BRUCE.

Nº 130 Monday, August 10.

—Vacuum sine mente popellum.

Musæ Anglicanæ.

An empty, thoughtless tribe.

AS the greatest part of mankind are more affected by things which strike the senses, than by excellences that are to be discerned by reason and thought, they form very erroneous judgments, when they compare the one with the other. An eminent instance of this is, that vulgar notion, that men addicted to contemplation are less useful members of society, than those of a different course of life. The business therefore of my present paper shall be to compare the distinct merits of the speculative and the active parts of mankind.

The advantages arising from the labours of generals and politicians are confined to narrow tracts of the earth; and while they promote the interest of their own country, they lessen or obstruct that of other nations. Whereas the light and knowledge that spring from speculation are not limited to any single spot, but equally diffused to the benefit of the whole globe. Besides, for the most part, the renown only of men of action is transmitted to distant posterity, their great exploits either dying with themselves, or soon after them; whereas speculative men continue to deserve well of the world thousands of years after they have left it. Their merits are propagated with their fame which is due to them; but a free gift to those, to whom their beneficence has outlived their persons.

What benefit do we receive from the renowned deeds of Cæsar or Alexander, that we should make them the constant themes of our praise? while the name of Pythagoras is more sparingly celebrated, though it be to him that we are indebted for our trade and riches. This may seem strange to a vulgar reader, but the following lowing reflection will make it plain. That philosopher invented the forty-seventh proposition of the first book of Euclid, which is the foundation of trigonometry and consequently of navigation, upon which the commerce of Great-Britain depends.

The mathematicks are so useful and ornamental to human life, that the ingenious Sir William Temple acknowledges in some part of his writings, all those advantages which distinguish polite nations from barbarians to be derived from them. But as these sciences cultivate the exterior parts of life, there are others of a more excellent nature, that endue the heart with rudiments of virtue, and by opening our prospects, and awakening our hopes, produce generous emotions and sublime sentiments in the soul.

The divine sages of antiquity, who by transmitting down to us their speculations upon good and evil, upon Providence, and the dignity and duration of thinking beings, have imprinted an idea of moral excellence on the minds of men, are most eminent benefactors to human nature; and, however overlooked in the loud and thoughtless applauses that are every day bestowed on the slaughterers and disturbers of mankind, yet they will never want the esteem and approbation of the wise and virtuous.

This apology in behalf of the speculative part of mankind, who make useful truth the end of their being, and its acquisition the business as well as entertainment of their lives, seems not improper, in order to rectify the mistake of those, who measure merit by noise and outward appearance, and are too apt to depreciate and ridicule men of thought and retirement. The rallery and reproaches which are thrown on that species by those who abound in the animal life, would incline one to think the world not sufficiently convinced, that whatsoever is good or excellent proceeds from reason and reflection.

Even those who only regard truth as such, without communicating their thoughts, or applying them not practice, will seem worthy members of the commonwealth, if we compare the innocence and tranquillity with which they pass their lives, with the fraud and impertinence impertinence of other men. But the number of those who by abstracted thoughts become useless, is inconsiderable in respect of them who are hurtful to mankind by an active and restless disposition.

As in the distribution of other things, so in this the wisdom of Providence appears, that men addicted to intellectual pursuits, bear a small proportion to those who rejoice in exerting the force and activity of their corporeal organs; for operations of the latter sort are limited to a narrow extent of time and place, whereas those of the mind are permanent and universal. Plato and Euclid enjoy a sort of immortality upon earth, and at this day read lectures to the world.

But if to inform the understanding, and regulate the will, is the most lasting and diffusive benefit, there will not be found so useful and excellent an institution as that of the Christian Priesthood, which is now become the scorn of fools. That a numerous order of men should be consecrated to the study of the most sublime and beneficial truths, with a design to propagate them by their discourses and writings, to inform their fellow creatures of the being and attributes of the Deity, to possess their minds with a sense of a future state, and not only to explain the nature of every virtue and moral duty, but likewise to persuade mankind to the practice of them by the most powerful and engaging motives, is a thing so excellent and necessary to the well-being of the world, that no body but a modern Free-Thinker could have the forehead or folly to turn it into ridicule.

The light in which these points should be exposed to the view of one who is prejudiced against the names, religion, church, priest, and the like, is to consider the Clergy as so many Philosophers, the Churches as Schools, and their sermons as lectures, for the information and improvement of the audience. How would the heart of Socrates or Tully have rejoiced, had they lived in a nation, where the law had made provision for philosophers to read lectures of morality and theology every seventh day, in several thousands of schools erected at the public charge throughout the whole country; at which lectures all ranks and sexes, without distinction were obliged to be present for their general improvement?

ment? And what wicked wretches would they think those men who would endeavour to defeat the purpose of so divine an institution?

It is indeed usual with that low tribe of writers, to pretend their design is only to reform the church, and expose the vices and not the order of the clergy. The author of a pamphlet printed the other day (which without my mentioning the title, will on this occasion occur to the thoughts of those who have read it) hopes to insinuate by that artifice what he is afraid or ashamed openly to maintain. But there are two points which clearly shew what it is he aims at. The first is, that he constantly uses the word priests in such a manner, as that his reader can not but observe he means to throw an odium on the clergy of the church of England, from their being called by a name which they enjoy in common with heathens and impostors. The other is, his raking together and exaggerating, with great spleen and industry, all those actions of church-men, which, either by their own illness, or the bad light in which he places them, tend to give men an ill impression of the dispensers of the gospel: All which he pathetically addresses to the consideration of his wise and honest countrymen of the laity. The sophistry and ill-breeding of these proceedings are so obvious to men who have any pretence to that character, that I need say no more either of them or their author.

The inhabitants of the earth may properly be ranged under the two general heads of Gentlemen and Mechanics. This distinction arises from the different occupations wherein they exert themselves. The former of these species is universally acknowledged to be more honourable than the other, who are looked upon as a base and inferior order of men. But if the world is in the right in this natural judgment, it is not generally so in the distribution of particular persons under their respective denominations. It is a clear settled point, that the Gentleman should be preferred to the Mechanic. But who is the Gentleman, and who the Mechanic, wants to be explained.

The Philosophers distinguish two parts in human nature; the rational and the animal. Now, if we attend to the reason of the thing, we shall find it difficult to assign a more just and adequate idea of these distinct species, then by defining the Gentleman to be him whose occupation lies in the exertion of his rational faculties, and the Mechanic him who is employed in the use of his animal parts, or the organic parts of his body.

The concurring assent of the world, in preferring Gentlemen to Mechanics, seems founded in that preference which is the rational part of our nature is intitled to above the animal; when we consider it in itself, as it is the seat of wisdom and understanding, as it is pure and immortal, and as it is that which, of all the known works of the creation, bears the brightest impress of the Deity.

It claims the same dignity and pre-eminence, if we consider it with respect to its object. Mechanical motives or operations are confined to a narrow circle of low and little things: Whereas reason inquires concerning the nature of intellectual beings; the great author of our existence; its end, and the proper methods of attaining it. Or, in case that noble faculty submit itself to nearer objects, it is not, like the organic powers, confined to a slow and painful manner of action; but shifts the scenes, and applies itself to the most distant objects with incredible ease and dispatch. Neither are the operations of the mind, like those of the hands, limited to one individual object, but at once extended to a whole species.

And as we have shewn the intellectual powers to be nobler than those of motion, both in their own nature, and in regard to their object, the same will still hold if we consider their office. It is the province of the former to preside and direct, of the latter to execute and obey. Those who apply their hands to the materials, appear the immediate builders of an edifice; but the beauty and proportion of it is owing to the architect, who designed the plan in his closet. And in like manner, whatever there is either in art or nature, of use or regularity, will be found to proceed from the superior principle of reason and understanding. These reflections, how obvious soever, do nevertheless seem not sufficiently attended to by those who, being at great pains to improve

prove the figure and motions of the body, neglect the culture of the mind.

From the premises it follows, that a man may descend from an ancient family, wear fine cloaths, and be master of what is commonly called good-breeding, and yet not merit the name of gentleman. All those whose principal accomplishments consist in the exertion of the mechanic powers, whether the organ made use of be the eye, the muscles of the face, the fingers, feet, or any other part, are in the eye of reason to be esteemed mechanics.

I do therefore, by these presents, declare, that all men and women, by what title soever distinguished, whose occupation it is either to ogle with the eye, flirt with the fan, dress, cringe, adjust the muscles of the face, or other parts of the body, are degraded from the rank of Gentry; which is from this time forward appropriated to those who employ the talents of the mind in the pursuit of knowledge and practice of virtue, and are content to take their places as they are distinguished by moral and intellectual accomplishments.

The rest of the human species come under the appellation of Mechanics, with this difference, that the professed Mechanics, who, not pretending to be Gentlemen, contain themselves within their proper sphere, are necessary to the well-being of mankind, and consequently should be more respected in a well-regulated commonwealth, than those Mechanics who make a merit of being useless.

Having hitherto considered the human species as distinguished into Gentlemen and Mechanics, I come now to treat of the machines; a sort of beings that have the outside or appearance of men, without being really such. The Free-Thinkers have often declared to the world, that they are not actuated by any incorporeal being or spirit; but that all the operations they exert proceed from the collision of certain corpuscles, endued with proper figures and motions. It is now a considerable time that I have been their proselyte in this point. I am even so far convinced that they are in the right, that I shall attempt proving it to others.

The

The mind being itself invisible, there is no other way to discern its existence, than by the effects which it produceth. Where design order and symmetry are visible in the effects, we conclude the cause to be an intelligent being; but where nothing of these can be found, we ascribe the effect to hazard, necessity, or the like. Now I appeal to any one who is conversant in the modern productions of our Free-Thinkers, if they do not look rather like effects of Chance, or at best of Mechanism, than of a thinking principle, and consequently whether the authors of those rhapsodies are not mere Machines.

The same point is likewise evident from their own assertion; it being plain that no one could mistake thought for motion, who knew what thought was. For these reasons I do hereby give it in charge to all Christians, that hereafter they speak of Free-Thinkers in the neuter gender, using the term it for him. They are to be considered as Automata, made up of bones and muscles, nerves, arteries and animal spirits; not so innocent indeed, but as destitute of thought and reason, as those little machines which the excellent author from whom I take the motto of this paper has so elegantly described *.

N^o 131 Tuesday, August 11.

Iter pigrorum quasi sepes spinarum. Ex. Latin. Prov.

The way of the slothful man is an hedge of thorns.

Prov. xv. 19.

THERE are two sorts of persons within the consideration of my frontispiece; the first are the mighty body of lingerers, persons who do not indeed employ their time criminally, but are such pretty innocents, who, as the poet says,

—waste away
In gentle inactivity the day.

* Mr. Addison.

The

The others being something more vivacious, are such as do not only omit to spend their time well, but are in the constant pursuit of criminal satisfactions. Whatever the Divine may think, the case of the first seems to be the most deplorable, as the habit of sloth is more invincible than that of vice. The first is preferred even when the man is fully possessed of himself, and submitted to with constant deliberation and cool thought. The other we are driven into generally through the heat of wine, or youth, which Mr. Hobbs calls a natural drunkenness; and therefore consequently are more excusable for any errors committed during the deprivation or suspension of our reason, than in the possession of it. The irregular starts of vicious appetites are in time destroyed by the gratification of them; but a well-ordered life of sloth receives daily strength from its continuance. ‘I went ‘ (says Solomon) by the field of the slothful, and the ‘ vineyard of the man void of understanding; and lo!
‘ it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone-wall thereof was ‘ broken down.’ To raise the image of this person, the same author adds. ‘The slothful man hideth his hand in ‘ his bosom, and it grieveth him to bring it again to his ‘ mouth.’ If there were no future account expected of spending our time, the immediate inconvenience that attends a life of idleness, should of itself be persuasion enough to the men of sense to avoid it. I say to the men of sense, because there are of these that give into it, and for these chiefly is this paper designed. Arguments drawn from future rewards and punishments, are things too remote for the consideration of stubborn sanguine youth: They are affected by such only as propose immediate pleasure or pain; as the strongest persuasive to the children of Israel was a land flowing with milk and honey. I believe I may say there is more toil, fatigue and uneasiness in sloth, than can be found in any employment a man will put himself upon. When a thoughtful man is once fixed this way, spleen is the necessary consequence. This directs him instantly to the contemplation of his health or circumstances, which must ever be found extremely bad upon these melancholy inquiries. If he has any common business upon his hands, numberless less objections arise, that make the dispatch of it impossible; and he cries out with Solomon, There is a Lion in the way, a Lion in the streets; that is, there is some difficulty or other, which to his imagination is as invincible as a Lion really would be. The man, on the contrary, that applies himself to books, or business, contracts a chearful confidence in all his undertakings, from the daily improvements of his knowledge or fortune, and instead of giving himself up to has that constant life in his visage and conversation, which the idle splenetic man borrows sometimes from the sunshine, exercise, or an agreeable friend. A recluse idle sobriety must be attended with more bitter remorse, than the most active debauchery can at any intervals be molested with. The rake, if he is a cautious manager, will allow himself very little time to examine his own conduct, and will bestow as few reflections upon himself, as the lingerer does upon any thing else unless he has the misfortune to repent. I repeat the misfortune to repent, because I have put the great day of account out of the present case, and am now inquiring not whose life is most irreligious, but most inconvenient. A Gentleman that has formerly been a very eminent lingerer, and something splenetic, informs me, that in one winter he drank six hampers of Spaw-water, several gallons of Chalybeate tincture, two hog-heads of bitters, at the rate of sixty pound an hoghead, laid one hundred and fifty infallible schemes, in every one of which he was disappointed, received a thousand affronts during the north-easterly winds, and in short run through more misery and expence, than the most meritorious bravo could boast of. Another tells me, that he fell into this way at the university, where the youth are too apt to be lulled into a state of such tranquillity as prejudices them against the bustle of that worldly business, for which this part of their education should prepare them. As he could with the utmost secrecy be idle in his own chamber, he says he was for some years irrecoverably sunk, and immersed in the luxury of an easy-chair, though at the same time, in the general opinion, he he passed for a hard student. During this lethargy he had some intervals of application to books, which rather aggravated than suspended the painful thoughts of a mis-spent life. Thus his supposed relief became his punishment, and like the damned in Milton, upon their conveyance at certain revolutions from fire to ice,

Thick-ey'd musing cursed melancholy, Shakespear.

—He felt by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce.

When he had a mind to go out, he was so scrupulous as to form some excuse or other which the idle are ever provided with, and could not satisfy himself without this ridiculous appearance of justice. Sometimes by his own contrivance and insinuation, the woman that looked after his chamber would convince him of the necessity of washing his room, or any other matter of the like joyous import, to which he always submitted, after having decently opposed it, and made his exit with much seeming reluctance, and inward delight. Thus did he pass the noon of his life in the solitude of a monk, and the guilt of a libertine. He is since awakened, by application, out of slumber; has no more spleen than a Dutchman, who, as Sir W. Temple observes, is not delicate or idle enough to suffer from this enemy, but ‘is always well when he is not ill, always pleased when he is not angry.’

There is a Gentleman I have seen at a coffee-house near the place of my abode, who having a pretty good estate, and a disinclination to books or business, to secure himself from some of the above-mentioned misfortunes, employs himself with much alacrity in the following method. Being vehemently disposed to loquacity, he has a person constantly with him, to whom he gives an annual pension for no other merit but being very attentive, and never interrupting him by question and answer, whatever he may utter that may seemingly require it. To secure to himself discourse, his fundamental maxim seems to be, by no means to consider what he is going to say. He delivers therefore every thought as it first intrudes itself upon him, and then, with all the freedom dom you could wish, will examine it, and rally the impertinence, or evince the truth of it. In short, he took the same pleasure in confuting himself, as he could have done in discomfiting an opponent: And his discourse was as that of two persons attacking each other with exceeding warmth, incoherence, and good-nature. There is another, whom I have seen in the park, employing himself with the same industry, though not with the same innocence. He is very dextrous in taking flies, and fixing one at each end of a horse hair, which his periwig supplies him with: He hangs them over a little stick, which suspension inclines them immediately to war upon each other, there being no possibility of retreat. From the frequent attention of his eyes to these combats, he perceives the several turns and advantages of the battle, which are altogether invisible to a common spectator. I the other day found him in the enjoyment of a couple of gigantic blue-bottles, which were hung out and embattled in the aforefaid warlike appointments. That I might enter into the secret shocks of this conflict, he lent me a magnifying glass, which presented me with an engagement between two of the most rueful monsters I have ever read of even in romance.

If we cannot bring ourselves to appoint and perform such tasks as would be of considerable advantage to us; let us resolve upon some other, however trifling, to be performed at appointed times. By this we may gain a victory over a wandering unsettled mind, and by this regulation of the impulse of our wills, may, in time, make them obedient to the dictates of our reason.

When I am disposed to treat of the irreligion of an idle life, it shall be under this head, ‘pereunt & impunitantur :’ which is an inscription upon a sun-dial in one of the inns of court, and is with great propriety placed to public view in such a place, where the inhabitants being in an everlasting hurry of business or pleasure, the busy may receive an innocent admonition to keep their appointments, and the idle a dreadful one not to keep theirs.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

August 10, 1713.

‘ I Am obliged to you for inserting my letter concern‘ ing the demolition of Dunkirk in your paper of ‘ the seventh instant; but you will find, upon perusal,
 ‘ that you have printed the word Three where you should ‘ have printed the word Two; which I desire you would ‘ amend by inserting the whole paragraph, and that ‘ which immediately follows it, in your very next paper.
 ‘ The paragraph runs thus:

“ The very common people know, what within two “ months after the signing of the peace, the works to“ wards the sea were to be demolished, and within three “ months after it the works towards the land.

“ That the said peace was signed the last of March
 “ O. S.

‘ I beg pardon for giving you so much trouble, which ‘ was only to avoid mistakes, having been very much ‘ abused by some whiggish senseless fellows, that give ‘ out I am for the Pretender.

Your most humble servant,

ENGLISH TORY.

N^o 132 Wednesday, August 12.Quisque suos patimur manes— Virg. Æn. 6. v. 743.

All have their manes.

DRYDEN.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

THE following letter was really written by a young Gentleman in a languishing illness, which both himself, and those who attended him, thought it impossible for him to outlive. If you think such an image of the state of a man's mind in that circumstance be worth publishing, it is at your service, and take it as follows:

Dear

Dear Sir,

‘ YOU formerly observed to me, that nothing made ‘ a more ridiculous figure in a man’s life, than the ‘ disparity we often find in him sick and well. Thus
‘ one of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhi‘ biting a miserable example of the weakness of his mind,
‘ or of his body, in their turns. I have had frequent ‘ opportunities of late to consider myself in these diffe‘ rent views, and hope I have received some advantage
‘ by it. If what Mr. Waller says be true, that

The soul’s dark cottage, batter’d and decay’d,
Lets in new light thro’ chinks that time has made :

‘ Then surely sickness, contributing no less than old age
‘ to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may ‘ discover the inclosed structure more plainly. Sickness ‘ is a sort of early old age; it teaches us a diffidence in ‘ our earthly state, and inspires us with the thoughts of ‘ a future, better than a thousand volumes of philoso‘ phers and divines. It gives so warning a concussion to ‘ those props of our vanity, our strength and youth, that ‘ we think of fortifying ourselves within, when there is ‘ so little dependence on our outworks. Youth, at the ‘ very best, is but a betrayer of human life in a gentler
‘ and smoother manner than age: It is like a stream ‘ that nourishes a plant upon its bank, and causes it to ‘ flourish and blossom to the sight, but at the same time
‘ is undermining it at the root in secret. My youth has ‘ dealt more fairly and openly with me: It has afforded ‘ several prospects of my danger, and given me an ad‘ vantage not very common to young men, that the at‘ tractions of the world have not dazzled me very much;
‘ and I began where most people end, with a full con‘ viction of the emptiness of all sorts of ambition, and ‘ the unsatisfactory nature of all human pleasures.

‘ When a smart fit of sickness tells me this scurvy
‘ tenement of my body will fall in a little time, I am ‘ even as unconcerned as was that honest Hibernian, who ‘ (being in bed in the great storm some years ago, and ‘ told

“ told the house would tumble over his head) made an“ swer, “ What care I for the house? I am only a “ lodger.” I fancy it is the best time to die when one “ is in the best humour; and so excessively weak as I now “ am, I may say with conscience, that I am not at all un“ easy at the thought that many men, whom I never had “ any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me.
 “ When I reflect what an inconsiderable little atom every “ single man is, with respect to the whole creation, me“ thinks it is a shame to be concerned at the removal of “ such a trivial animal as I am. The morning after my “ exit, the sun will arise as bright as ever, the flowers “ smell as sweet, the plants spring as green, the world “ will proceed in its old course, people will laugh as “ heartily, and marry as fast, as they were used to do.
 “ The memory of man” as it is elegantly exprest in “ the Wisdom of Solomon) “ passeth away as the remem“ brance of a guest that tarrieth but one day.” There “ are reasons enough, in the fourth chapter of the same “ book, to make any young man contented with the “ prospect of death. “ For honourable age is not that “ which standeth in length of time, or is measured by “ number of years. But wisdom is the grey hair to “ men, and an unspotted life is old age.” He was taken “ away speedily, lest that “ wickedness should alter his “ understanding, or deceit beguile his soul.”

I am, yours.

TO NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq; Greeting.

Old Dad,

“ I Am so happy as to be the husband of a woman that “ never is in the wrong, and yet is at continual war “ with every body, especially with all her servants, and “ myself. As to her maids, she never fails of having at “ least a dozen or fourteen in each year, yet never has “ above one at a time, and the last that comes is always “ the worst that ever she had in her life; although they “ have given very good content in better families than “ mine for several years together: Not that she has the “ pleasure of turning them away, but she does so ferrit “ them about, Forsooth and Mistress them up, and so find fault

‘ fault with every thing they do, and talks to them so ‘ loud and so long, that they either give her immediate ‘ warning, or march off without any wages at all. So ‘ that through her great zeal and care to make them bet‘ ter servants than any in the world, and their obstina‘ cy in being no better than they can, our house is a sort
 ‘ of Bedlam, and nothing in order; for by that time a ‘ maid comes to know where things stand, whip, she is ‘ gone, and so we have not another in four or five days,
 ‘ and this all the year round: As to myself, all the ‘ world believes me to be one of the best of husbands, and ‘ I am of the world’s mind, until my dear Patient Grizzel
 ‘ comes to give her opinion about me, and then you ‘ would believe I am as bad as her maids. Oh, Mr.
 ‘ IRONSIDE, never was a woman used as she is. The ‘ world does not think how unhappy she is! I am a wolf
 ‘ in sheep’s clothing. And then her neighbours are so ‘ ill-natur’d, that they refuse to suffer her to say what ‘ she pleases of their families, without either returning
 ‘ her compliments, or withdrawing from her oratory;
 ‘ so that the poor woman has scarcely any society ‘ abroad, nor any comfort at home, and all through the ‘ fauciness of servants, and the unkindness of a husband ‘ that is so cruel to her, as to desire her to be quiet. But ‘ she is coming. I am in haste,

S I R, your humble servant,

NICHOLAS EARRING.

S I R,

‘ I Hope you will not endure this Dumb Clumb, for I ‘ am the unlucky spouse of one of those Gentlemen,
 ‘ and when my dear comes from this joyless society, I am
 ‘ an impertinent, noisy rattle-snake, my maid is a faucy‘ fow, the man is a thick-skulled puppy, and founders
 ‘ like a horse; my cook is a tasteless ass; and if a child ‘ cry, the maid is a careless bear: If I have company,
 ‘ they are a parcel of chattering magpies; if abroad, I ‘ am a gagging goose; when I return, you are a fine ‘ galloper; women, like cats, should keep the house.
 ‘ This is a frequent sentence with him. Consider some ‘ remedy against a temper that seldom speaks, and then ‘ speaks

‘ speaks only unkindness. This will be a relief to all ‘ those miserable women who are married to the worst ‘ of tempers, the fullen, more especially to your distressed appellant,

GOODY DUMP.

Friend NESTOR,

‘ OUR Brother Tremble having lately given thee
 ‘ wholsom advice concerning tuckers, I send thee
 ‘ a word of counsel touching thyself: Verily thou hast
 ‘ found great favour with the godly sisters. I have read
 ‘ in that mysterious book called Æsop’s fables, how once ‘ upon a time an afs arrayed himself in the skin of a ‘ lion, thereby designing to appear as one of the mighty,
 ‘ But behold the vanity of this world was found light,
 ‘ the spirit of untruth became altogether naked. When ‘ the vain-glorious animal opened his jaws to roar, the ‘ lewd voice of an afs braying was heard in the moun‘ tains. Friend, friend, let the moral of this sink deep ‘ into thy mind; the more thou ponderest thereon, the ‘ fitter thou wilt become for the fellowship of the faith‘ ful: We have every day more and more hopes of thee,
 ‘ but between thee and me, when thou art converted,
 ‘ thou must take to thee a scripture name: One of thy ‘ writing brethren bore a very good name, he was en‘ titled ISAAC, but now sleepeth. JACOB suiteth thy ‘ bookfeller well. Verily NESTOR foundeth Babylonish
 ‘ in the ears of thy well-wisher and constant reader,

The third day of the week,
 prophanely called Tuesday.

RUTH PRIM.

S I R,

‘ NOtwithstanding your grave advice to the fair
 ‘ sex not to lay the beauties of their necks so ‘ open, I find they mind you so little, that we young ‘ men are in as much danger as ever. Yesterday, about ‘ seven in the evening, I took a turn with a Gentle‘ man just come to town, in a publick walk. We had ‘ not walked above two rounds, when the spark on a
 Vol. II. I sudden

‘ sudden pretended weariness, and as I importuned him
 ‘ to stay longer, he turned short, and pointing to a ce‘ lebrated beauty: What (said he) do you think I am
 ‘ made of, that I should bear the sight of such snowy ‘ breasts? oh! she is intolerably handsome! Upon this ‘ we parted, and I resolved to take a little more air in ‘ the garden, yet avoid the danger by casting my eyes
 ‘ downwards: But to my unspeakable surprise, I dis‘ covered, in the same fair creature, the finest ankle and ‘ prettiest foot that ever fancy imagined. If the petti‘ coats, as well as the stays, thus diminish, what shall ‘ we do, dear NESTOR? If it is neither safe to look ‘ at the head nor the feet of the charmer, whither shall ‘ we direct our eyes? I need not trouble you with any ‘ further description of her, but I beg you would con‘ sider that your wards are frail and mortal.

Your most obedient servant,

EPIMETRIUS.

N^o 133

Thursday, August 13.

Oh! fatal love of fame? Oh glorious heat!

Only destructive to the brave and great.

ADDISON'S Campaign.

THE letters which I published in the GUARDIAN of Saturday last, are written with such spirit and greatness of mind, that they had excited a great curiosity in my Lady Lizard's family, to know what occasioned a quarrel betwixt the two brave men who wrote them; and what was the event of their combat.
 I found the family the other day listening in a circle to Mr. William the Templar, who was informing the Ladies of the ceremonies used in the single combat, when the Kings of England permitted such trials to be performed in their presence. He took occasion from the chance of such judicial proceedings, to relate a custom used, in a certain

certain part of India, to determine law-suits, which he produced as a parallel to the single combat. The custom is, “ That the plaintiff and defendant are thrown into a “ river, where each endeavours to keep under water as “ long as he is able ; and he who comes up first loses the “ cause :” The author adds, “ that if they had no other “ way of deciding controversies in Europe, the lawyers “ might e’en throw themselves in after them.”

The mirth, occasioned by this Indian law, did not hinder the Ladies from reflecting still more upon the above-named letters. I found they had agreed, that it must be a mistress which caused the duel ; and Mrs. Cornelia had already settled in her mind the fashion of their arms, their colours and devices : My Lady only asked with a sigh, if either of the combatants had a wife and children.

In order to give them what satisfaction I could, I looked over my papers ; and though I could not find the occasion of the difference, I shall present the world with an authentic account of the fight, written by the survivor to a courtier. The gallant behaviour of the combatants may serve to raise in our minds a yet higher detestation of that false honour, which robs our country of men so fitted to support and adorn it.

Sir EDWARD SACKVILLE’s relation of the fight betwixt him and the lord BRUCE.

Worthy SIR,

‘ AS I am not ignorant, so ought I to be sensible of ‘ the false aspersions some authorless tongues
 ‘ have laid upon me, in the report of the unfortunate ‘ passage lately happened between the Lord Bruce and ‘ myself, which as they are spread here, so I may justly ‘ fear they reign also where you are. There are but two ‘ ways to resolve doubts of this nature ; by oath, or by ‘ sword. The first is due to magistrates, and communi‘ cable to friends ; the other to such as maliciously slan‘ der, and impudently defend their assertion. Your love,
 ‘ not my merit, assure me, you hold me your friend,
 ‘ which esteem I am much desirous to retain. Do me ‘ therefore the right to understand the truth of that ; and

‘ in my behalf inform others, who either are, or may be ‘ infected with sinister rumours, much prejudicial to that ‘ fair opinion I desire to hold amongst all worthy per‘ sons. And on the faith of a Gentleman, the relation
‘ I shall give is neither more nor less than the bare truth.
‘ The inclosed contains the first citation, sent me from ‘ Paris by a Scotch Gentleman, who delivered it to me in ‘ Derbyshire at my father-in-law’s house: After it follows
‘ my then answer, returned him by the same bearer.
‘ The next is my accomplishment of my first promise,
‘ being a particular assignation of place and weapons,
‘ which I sent by a servant of mine, by post from Rotter‘ dam, as soon as I landed there. The receipt of which,
‘ joined with an acknowledgment of my too fair car‘ riage to the deceased Lord, is testified by the last,
‘ which periods the business until we met at Tergosa in ‘ Zealand, it being the place allotted for rendezvous;
‘ where he, accompanied with one Mr. Crawford, an Eng‘ lish Gentleman, for his Second, a surgeon, and a man, ‘ arrived with all the speed he could. And there having ‘ rendered himself, I addressed my Second, Sir John Heidon,
‘ to let him understand, that now all following should be ‘ done by consent, as concerning the terms whereon
‘ we should fight, as also the place. To our Seconds we ‘ gave power for their appointments, who agreed we ‘ should go to Antwerp, from thence to Bergen-op-Zoom,
‘ where in the mid-way but a village divides the States ‘ territories from the Arch-Duke’s. And there was the ‘ destined stage, to the end, that having ended, he, that ‘ could, might presently exempt himself from the justice ‘ of the country, by retiring into the dominion not of‘ fended. It was farther concluded, that in case any ‘ should fall or slip, that then the combat should cease,
‘ and he whose ill fortune had so subjected him, was to ‘ acknowledge his life to have been in the other’s hands.
‘ But in case one party’s sword should break, because ‘ that could only chance by hazard, it was agreed that ‘ the other should take no advantage, but either then
‘ be made friends, or else upon even terms go to it again.
‘ Thus these conclusions being each of them related to ‘ his party, was by us both approved, and assented to.
‘ Accordingly we embarked for Antwerp. And by reason,
‘ my

‘ my Lord, as I conceive, because he could not hand-‘ ly, without danger or discovery, had not paired the ‘ sword I sent him to Paris; bringing one of the same ‘ length, but twice as broad; my Second excepted against ‘ it, and advised me to match my own, and send him
‘ the choice, which I obeyed; it being, you know, the ‘ challenger’s privilege to elect his weapon. At the ‘ delivery of the sword, which was performed by Sir ‘ John Heidon, it pleased the Lord Bruce to choose my ‘ own, and then, past expectation, he told him, that he ‘ found himself so far behind hand as a little of my blood
‘ would not serve his turn; and therefore he was now ‘ resolved to have me alone, because he knew (for I will ‘ use his own words) “that so worthy a Gentleman, and ‘ my friend, could not endure to stand by and see him do
‘ that which he must, to satisfy himself and his honour.”
‘ Hereupon Sir John Heidon replied, that such intentions
‘ were bloody and butchery, far unfitting so noble a ‘ personage, who should desire to bleed for reputation, ‘ not for life; withal adding, he thought himself in‘ jured, being come thus far, now to be prohibited from ‘ executing those honourable offices he came for. The ‘ Lord for answer, only reiterated his former resoluti‘ ons; whereupon, Sir John leaving him the sword he ‘ had elected, delivered me the other, with his determi‘ nations. The which not for matter, but manner,
‘ so moved me, as though to my remembrance, I had ‘ not of a long while eaten more liberally than at dinner,
‘ and therefore unfit for such an action (seeing the sur‘ geons hold a wound upon a full stomach much more ‘ dangerous than otherwise) I requested my Second to ‘ certify him, I would presently decide the difference,
‘ and therefore he should presently meet me on horse‘ back, only waited on by our surgeons, they being un‘ armed. Together we rode, but one before the other
‘ some twelve score, about two English miles: And then,
‘ passion having so weak an enemy to assail, as my direc‘ tion, easily became victor, and using his power, made ‘ me obedient to his commands. I being verily mad
‘ with anger, the Lord Bruce should thirst after my life
‘ with a kind of assuredness, seeing I had come so far,
‘ and needlessly, to give him leave to regain his lost re‘ putation;

putation; I bade him alight, which with all willingness he quickly granted, and there in a meadow ankle deep in water at the least, bidding farewell to our doublets, in our shirts began to charge each other; having afore commanded our surgeons to withdraw themselves a pretty distance from us, conjuring them besides, as they respected our favours, or their own safeties, not to stir, but suffer us to execute our pleasures: We being fully resolved (God forgive us!) to dispatch each other by what means we could; I made a thrust at my enemy, but was short; and in drawing back my arm I received a great wound thereon, which I interpreted as a reward for my short shooting; but in revenge I prest in to him, though I then missed him also, and then received a wound in my right pap, which past level through my body, and almost to my back. And there we wrestled for the two greatest and dearest prizes we could ever expect trial for, honour and life. In which struggling my hand, having but an ordinary glove on it, lost one of her servants though the meanest; which hung by a skin, and to sight yet remaineth as before, and I am put in hope one day to recover the use of it again. But at last, breathless, yet keeping our holds, there past on both sides propositions of quitting each other's sword. But when amity was dead, confidence could not live; and who should quit first was the question; which, on neither part, either would perform, and restraining again afresh, with a kick and a wrench together, I freed my long captivated weapon. Which incontinently levying at his throat, being master still of his, I demanded, if he would ask his life, or yield his sword; both which, though in that imminent danger, he bravely denied to do. Myself being wounded, and feeling loss of blood, having three conduits running on me, which began to make me faint; and he courageously persisting not to accord to either of my propositions; through remembrance of his former bloody desire, and feeling of my present estate, I struck at his heart, but with his avoiding mist my aim, yet past through the body, and drawing out my sword repast it again, through another place; when he cried

“ Oh!

“ Oh! I am slain!” seconding his speech with all the force he had to cast me. But being too weak, after I had defended his assault, I easily became master of him, laying him on his back; when being upon him,
I redemanded if he would request his life, but it seemed he prized it not at so dear a rate to be behold-en for it; bravely replying “ he scorned it.” Which answer of his was so noble and worthy, as I protest I could not find in my heart to offer him any more violence, only keeping him down until at length his surgeon, afar off, cried out, “ he would immediately die if his wounds were not stopped.” Whereupon I asked if he desired his surgeon should come, which he accepted of; and so being drawn away, I never offered to take his sword, accounting it inhuman to rob a dead man, for so I held him to be. This thus ended, I retired to my surgeon, in whose arms after I had remained a while for want of blood, I lost my sight, and withal, as I then thought, my life also. But strong water and his diligence quickly recovered me, when I escaped a great danger. For my Lord’s surgeon, when no body dreamt of it, came full at me with his Lord’s sword; and had not mine, with my sword, interposed himself, I had been slain by those base hands: Although my Lord Bruce, weltering in his blood, and past all expectation of life, conformable to all his former carriage, which was undoubtedly noble, cried out, “ Rascal! hold thy hand.” So may I prosper as I have dealt sincerely with you in this relation; which I pray you, with the inclosed letter, deliver to my Lord Chamberlain. And so, &c.

yours,

Louvain, the 8th of Sept. 1613.

EDWARD SACKVILLE.

N^o 134 Friday, August 14.

*Matronæ præter faciem nil cernere possis,
Cætera, ni Catia est, demissâ veste tegentis.*

Hor. Sat. 2. l. 1. v. 94.

In virtuous dames, you see their face alone :
None show the rest, but women of the town.

MY Lion having given over roaring for some time, I find that several stories have been spread abroad in the country to his disadvantage. One of my correspondents tells me, it is confidently reported of him, in their parts, that he is silenced by authority ; another informs me, that he hears he was sent for by a messenger, who had orders to bring him away with all his papers, and that upon examination he was found to contain several dangerous things in his maw. I must not omit another report which has been raised by such as are enemies to me and my Lion, namely, that he is starved for want of food, and that he has not had a good meals meat for this fortnight. I do hereby declare these reports to be altogether groundless ; and since I am contradicting common fame, I must likewise acquaint the world, that the story of a two hundred pound bank-bill being conveyed to me through the mouth of my Lion has no foundation of truth in it. The matter of fact is this, my Lion has not roared for these twelve days past, by reason that his prompters have put very ill words in his mouth, and such as he could not utter with common honour and decency. Notwithstanding the admonitions I have given my correspondents, many of them have crammed great quantities of scandal down his throat, others have choaked him with lewdness and ribaldry. Some of them have gorged him with so much nonsense that they have made a very ass of him. On Monday last, upon examining, I found him an ar-rant French tory, and the day after, a virulent whig.

Some

Some have been so mischievous as to make him fall upon his keeper, and give me very reproachful language; but as I have promised to restrain him from hurting any man's reputation, so my reader may be assured that I myself shall be the last man whom I will suffer him to abuse. However, that I may give general satisfaction, I have a design of converting a room in Mr. Button's house to the Lion's library, in which I intend to deposite the several packets of letters and private intelligence which I do not communicate to the publick. These manuscripts will in time be very valuable, and may afford good lights to future historians who shall give an account of the present age. In the mean while, as the Lion is an animal which has a particular regard for chastity, it has been observed that mine has taken delight in roaring very vehemently against the untuckered neck, and, as far as I can find by him, is still determined to roar louder and louder, until that irregularity be thoroughly reformed.

Good Mr. IRONSIDE.

I Must acquaint you, for your comfort, that your Lion is grown a kind of bull-beggar among the women where I live. When my wife comes home late from cards, or commits any other enormity, I whisper in her ear, partly between jest and earnest, that "I will tell the Lion of her." Dear Sir, do not let them alone until you have made them put on their tuckers again. What can be a greater sign, that they themselves are sensible they have stripped too far, that their pretending to call a bit of linen which will hardly cover a silver groat their modesty-piece? it is observed that this modesty-piece still sinks lower and lower, and who knows where it will fix at last?

You must know, Sir, I am a Turkey merchant, and I lived several years in a country where the women show nothing but their eyes. Upon my return to England I was almost out of countenance to see my pretty country-women laying open their charms with so much liberality, though at that time many of them were concealed under the modest shade of the tucker. I soon after married a very fine woman, who always ‘ goes in the extremity of the fashion. I was pleased ‘ to think, as every married man must be, that I should ‘ make daily discoveries in the dear creature, which ‘ were unknown to the rest of the world. But since ‘ this new airy fashion is come up, every one’s eye is as ‘ familiar with her as mine; for I can positively affirm,

‘ that her neck is grown eight inches within these three ‘ years. And what makes me tremble when I think ‘ of it, that pretty foot and ankle are now exposed to ‘ the sight of the whole world, which made my very ‘ heart dance within me, when I first found myself their ‘ proprietor. As in all appearance the curtain is still ‘ rising, I find a parcel of rascally young fellows in the ‘ neighbourhood are in hopes to be presented with some ‘ new scene every day.

‘ In short, Sir, the tables are now quite turned upon ‘ me. Instead of being acquainted with her person
‘ more than other men, I have now the least share of it.
‘ When she is at home she is continually muffled up,
‘ and concealed in mobs, morning gowns and hand‘ kerchiefs; but strips every afternoon to appear in ‘ publick. For ought I can find, when she has thrown ‘ aside half her clothes, she begins to think herself
‘ half drest. Now, Sir, if I may presume to say so,
‘ you have been in the wrong to think of reforming
‘ this fashion, by showing the immodesty of it. If you ‘ expect to make female profelytes, you must convince ‘ them, that if they would get husbands, they must ‘ not shew all before marriage. I am sure, had my ‘ wife been dressed before I married her as she is at ‘ present, she would have satisfied a good half of my ‘ curiosity. Many a man has been hindred from laying ‘ out his money on a show, by seeing the principal ‘ figure of it hung out before the door. I have often ‘ observed a curious passenger so attentive to these ‘ objects which he could see for nothing, that he took ‘ no notice of the master of the show, who was conti‘ nually crying out, “Pray gentlemen walk in.”

‘ I have told you at the beginning of this letter,
‘ how Mahomet’s she-disciples are obliged to cover ‘ themselves; you have lately informed us from the ‘ foreign news papers of the regulations which the ‘ pope

‘ pope is now making among the Roman ladies in this ‘ particular ; and I hope, our British dames notwith‘ standing they have the finest skins in the world, will ‘ be content to shew no more of them than what ‘ belongs to the face and to the neck properly speaking.
 ‘ Their being fair is no excuse for their being naked.

‘ You know, Sir, that in the beginning of last ‘ century, there was a sect of men amongst us, who ‘ called themselves Adamites, and appeared in publick ‘ without clothes. This heresy may spring up in the ‘ other sex, if you do not put a timely stop to it, there ‘ being so many in all publick places, who show so ‘ great an inclination to be Evites.

I am, S I R, &c.

N^o 135 Saturday, August 15.

— — — — — meâ
Virtute me involvo — — — — — Hor. Od. 29. l. 3. v. 54.

— — — — — Virtue, tho' in rags, will keep me warm.

DRYDEN.

A Good conscience is to the soul what health is to the body ; it preserves a constant ease and serenity within us, and more than countervails all the calamities and afflictions which can possibly befall us. I know nothing so hard for a generous mind to get over as calumny and reproach, and cannot find any method of quieting the soul under them, besides this single one, of our being conscious to ourselves that we do not deserve them.

I have been always mightily pleased with that passage in Don Quixote, where the fantastical knight is represented as loading a gentleman of good sense with praises and elogiums. Upon which the gentleman makes this reflection to himself : How grateful is praise to human nature !

nature! I cannot forbear being secretly pleased with the commendations I receive, though I am sensible it is a madman that bestows them on me. In the same manner, though we are often sure that the censures which are passed upon us are uttered by those who know nothing of us, and have neither means nor abilities to form a right judgment of us, we cannot forbear being grieved at what they say.

In order to heal this infirmity, which is so natural to the best and wisest of men, I have taken a particular pleasure in observing the conduct of the old philosophers, how they bore themselves up against the malice and detraction of their enemies.

The way to silence calumny, says Bias, is to be always exercised in such things as are praise-worthy. Socrates, after having received sentence, told his friends, that he had always accustomed himself to regard truth and not censure, and that he was not troubled at his condemnation, because he knew himself free from guilt. It was in the same spirit that he heard the accusations of his two great adversaries, who had uttered against him the most virulent reproaches. Anytus and Melitus, says he, may procure sentence against me, but they cannot hurt me. This divine philosopher was so well fortified in his own innocence, that he neglected all the impotence of evil tongues which were engaged in his destruction. This was properly the support of a good conscience, that contradicted the reports which had been raised against him, and cleared him to himself.

Others of the philosophers rather choose to retort the injury by a smart reply, than thus to disarm it with respect to themselves. They show that it stung them, though at the same time they had the address to make their aggressors suffer with them. Of this kind was Aristotle's reply to one who pursued him with long and bitter invectives. You, says he, who are used to suffer reproaches, utter them with delight; I who have not been used to utter them take no pleasure in hearing them. Diogenes was still more severe on one who spoke ill of him: No body will believe you when you speak ill of me, any more than they would believe me should I speak well of you.

In

In these and many other instances, I could produce, the bitterness of the answer sufficiently testifies the uneasiness of mind the person was under who made it. I would rather advise my reader, if he has not in this case the secret consolation, that he deserves no such reproaches as are cast upon him: To follow the advice of Epictetus; if any one speaks ill of thee, consider whether he has truth on his side; and if so, reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee. When Anaximander was told, that the very boys laughed at his singing; Ay, says he; then I must learn to sing better. But of all the sayings of philosophers which I have gathered together for my own use on this occasion, there are none which carry in them more candour and good sense than the two following ones of Plato. Being told that he had many enemies who spoke ill of him: It is no matter, said he, I will live so that none shall believe them. Hearing at another time, that an intimate friend of his had spoken detractingly of him: I am sure he would not do it, says he, if he had not some reason for it. This is the surest as well as the noblest way of drawing the sting out of a reproach, and a true method of preparing a man for that great and only relief against the pains of calumny, “a good conscience.”

I designed in this essay, to show, that there is no happiness wanting to him who is possessed of this excellent frame of mind, and that no person can be miserable who is in the enjoyment of it; but I find this subject so well treated in one of Dr. South's sermons, that I shall fill this Saturday's paper with a passage of it, which cannot but make the man's heart burn within him, who reads it with due attention.

That admirable author having shown the virtue of a good conscience in supporting a man under the greatest trials and difficulties of life, concludes with representing its force and efficacy in the hour of death.

“The third and last instance, in which above all “others this confidence towards God does most emi“nently show and exert itself, is at the time of death.
“Which surely gives the grand opportunity of trying “both the strength and worth of every principle.
“When a man shall be just about to quit the stage
of

“ of this world, to put off his mortality, and to “ deliver up his last accounts to God ; at which sad “ time his memory shall serve him for little else, but “ to terrify him with a frightful review of his past life,
“ and his former extravagancies stripped of all their “ pleasure, but retaining their guilt : What is it then “ that can promise him a fair passage into the other “ world, or a comfortable appearance before his dread“ ful judge when he is there ? Not all the friends and “ interests, all the riches and honours under heaven
“ can speak so much as a word for him, or one word
“ of comfort to him in that condition ; they may possi“ bly reproach, but they cannot relieve him.

“ No, at this disconsolate time, when the busy tempter “ shall be more than usually apt to vex and trouble him,
“ and the pains of a dying body to hinder and discom“ pose him, and the settlement of worldly affairs to dis“ turb and confound him ; and in a word, all things con“ spire to make his sick bed grievous and uneasy ; nothing
“ can then stand up against all these ruins, and speak “ life in the midst of death, but a clear conscience.

“ And the testimony of that shall make the comforts of “ heaven descend upon his weary head, like a refreshing “ dew, or shower upon a parched ground. It shall give “ him some lively earnest, and secret anticipations of his “ approaching joy. It shall bid his soul go out of the “ body undauntedly, and lift up his head with confidence “ before saints and angels. Surely the comfort, which “ it conveys at this season, is something bigger than the “ capacities of mortality, mighty and unspeakable, and “ not to be understood until it comes to be felt.

“ And now, who would not quit all the pleasures and “ trash and trifles, which are apt to captivate the heart “ of man, and pursue the greatest rigours of piety, and “ austerities of a good life, to purchase to himself such a “ conscience, as at the hour of death, when all the friend“ ship in the world shall bid him adieu, and the whole “ creation turns its back upon him, shall dismiss the soul
“ and close his eyes with that blessed sentence, Well “ done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into “ the joy of thy Lord.”

No 136 Monday, August 17.

*Noctes atque dies patet atri janua ditis.*Virg. Æn. 6. v. 127.

The gates of death are open night and day.

DRYDEN.

SOME of our quaint moralists have pleased themselves with an observation, that there is but one way of coming into the world, but a thousand to go out of it. I have seen a fanciful dream written by a Spaniard in which he introduces the person of death metamorphosing himself like another Proteus into innumerable shapes and figures. To represent the fatality of fevers and agues, with many other distempers and accidents that destroy the life of man, death enters first of all in a body of fire; a little after he appears like a man of snow, then rolls about the room like a cannon-ball, then lies on the table like a gilded pill; after this he transforms himself all of a sudden, into a sword, then dwindles successively to a dagger, to a bodkin, to a crooked pin, to a needle, to a hair. The Spaniard's design by this allegory, was to shew the many assaults to which the life of man is exposed, and to let his reader see that there was scarce any thing in nature so very mean and inconsiderable, but that it was able to overcome him, and lay his head in the dust. I remember Monsieur Paschal, in his reflections on Providence, has this observation upon Cromwell's death. That usurper, says he, who had destroyed the royal family in his own nation, who had made all the princes of Europe tremble, and struck a terror into Rome itself, was at last taken out of the world by a fit of the gravel. An atom, a grain of sand, says he, that would have been of no significance in any other part of the universe, being lodged in such a particular place, was an instrument of Providence to bring about the most happy revolutions, and to remove from the face of the earth this troubler of mankind.

kind. In short, swarms of distempers are every where hovering over us ; casualties, whether at home or abroad, whether we wake or sleep, sit or walk, are planted about us in ambuscade ; every element, every climate, every season, all nature is full of death.

There are more casualties incident to men than women, as battles, sea-voyages with several dangerous trades and professions that often prove fatal to the practitioners. I have seen a treatise written by a learned physician on the distempers peculiar to those who work in stone or marble. It has been therefore observed by curious men, that upon a strict examination there are more males brought into the world than females. Providence to supply this waste in the species, has made allowances for it by a suitable redundancy in the male sex. Those who have made the nicest calculations have found, I think, that taking one year with another, there are about twenty boys produced to nineteen girls. This observation is so well grounded, that I will at any time lay five to four, that there appear more male than female infants in every weekly bill of mortality. And what can be a more demonstrative argument for the superintendency of Providence ?

There are casualties incident to every particular station and way of life. A friend of mine was once saying, that he fancied there would be something new and diverting in a country bill of mortality. Upon communicating this hint to a gentleman who was then going down to his seat, which lies at a considerable distance from London, he told me he would make a collection, as well as he could, of the several deaths that had happened in his country for the space of a whole year, and send them up to me in the form of such a bill as I mentioned. The reader will here see that he has been as good as his promise. To make it the more entertaining he has set down, among the real distempers, some imaginary ones, to which the country people ascribe the deaths of some of their neighbours. I shall extract out of them such only as seem almost peculiar to the country, laying aside fevers, apoplexies, small-pox, and the like, which they have in common with towns and cities.

Of a fix bar-gate, fox-hunters	4
Of a quick-set hedge	2
Two duels, viz.
First, between a frying-pan and a pitch-fork	1
Second, between a joint-stool and a brown jug	1
Bewitched	13
Of an evil tongue	9
Croft in love	7
Broke his neck in robbing a hen-roost	1
Cut finger turned to a gangreen by an old gentlewoman of the parish	1
Surfeit of curds and cream	2
Took cold sleeping at church	14
Of a sprain in his shoulder by saving his dog at a bull- baiting	1
Lady B——'s cordial water	2
Knocked down by a quart bottle	1
Frighted out of his wits by a headless dog with fawcer eyes	1
Of October	25
Broke a vein in bawling for a knight of the shire	1
Old women drowned upon trial of witchcraft	3
Climbing a crow's nest	1
Chalk and green apples	4
Led into a horse-pond by a Will of the Whisp	1
Died of a fright in an exercise of the Trained Bands	1
Over-eat himself at a house-warming	1
By the parson's bull	2
Vagrant beggars worried by the squire's house-dog	2
Shot by mistake	1
Of a mountebank doctor	6
Of the Merry Andrew	1
Caught her death in a wet ditch	1
Old age	100
Foul distemper	0

68X22

N^o 137 Tuesday, August 18.

— sanctus haberi

Iustitiæque tenax, factis dictisque mereris?

Agnosco procerem—

Juv. Sat. 8. v. 24.

Convince the world, that you're devout and true,

Be just in all you say, in all you do;

Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be

A peer of the first quality to me. STEPNEY.

HOrace, Juvenal, Boileau, and indeed the greatest writers in almost every age, have exposed with all the strength of wit and good sense, the vanity of a man's valuing himself upon his ancestors, and endeavoured to shew that true nobility consists in virtue, not in birth. With submission however to so many great authorities, I think they have pushed this matter a little too far. We ought in gratitude to honour the posterity of those who have raised either the interest or reputation of their country. And by whose labours we ourselves are more happy, wise, or virtuous than we should have been without them. Besides, naturally speaking, a man bids fairer for greatness of soul, who is the descendent of worthy ancestors, and has good blood in his veins, than one who is come of an ignoble and obscure parentage. For these reasons I think a man of merit, who is derived from an illustrious line is very justly to be regarded more than a man of equal merit, who has no claim to hereditary honours. Nay, I think those who are indifferent in themselves and have nothing else to distinguish them but the virtues of their forefathers, are to be looked upon with a degree of veneration even upon that account, and to be more respected than the common run of men who are of low and vulgar extraction.

After having thus ascribed due honours to birth and parentage, I must however take notice of those who arrogate to themselves more honours than are due to them on this account. The first are such who are not enough sensible that vice and ignorance taint the blood, and that an unworthy behaviour degrades and disennobles a man in the eye of the world as much as birth and family aggrandize and exalt him.

to

The second are those who believe a new man of an elevated merit is not more to be honoured than an insignificant and worthless man who is descended from a long line of patriots and heroes: or, in other words, behold with contempt a person who is such a man as the first founder of their family was, upon whose reputation they value themselves.

But I shall chiefly apply myself to those whose quality sits uppermost in all their discourses and behaviour. An empty man of a great family is a creature that is scarce conversible. You read his ancestry in his smile, in his air, in his eye-brow. He has indeed nothing but his nobility to give employment to his thoughts. Rank and precedence are the important points which he is always discussing within himself. A gentleman of this turn began a speech in one of king Charles's parliaments: "Sir, I had the honour to be born at a time"—upon which a rough honest gentleman took him up short, "I would fain know what that gentleman means, Is there any one in the house that has not had the honour to be born as well as himself?" The good sense which reigns in our nation has pretty well destroyed this starched behaviour among men who have seen the world, and know that every gentleman will be treated upon a foot of equality. But there are many who have had their education among women, dependents or flatterers, that lose all the respect which would otherwise be paid them, by being too assiduous in procuring it.

My lord Froth has been so educated in punctilio, that he governs himself by a ceremonial in all the ordinary occurrences of life. He measures out his bow to the degree of the person he converses with. I have seen him in every inclination of the body, from a familiar nod to the low stoop in the salutation sign. I remember five of us, who were acquainted with one another, met together one morning at his lodgings, when a wag of the company was saying, it would be worth worth while to observe how he would distinguish us at his first entrance. Accordingly he no sooner came into the room, but casting his eye about, "My lord such a " one, says he, your most humble servant. Sir Richard

" your humble servant. Your servant, Mr. Ironside. Mr.
" Ducker how do you do? Ha! Frank, are you there?"

There is nothing more easy than to discover a man whose heart is full of his family. Weak minds that have imbibed a strong tincture of the nursery, younger brothers that have been brought up to nothing, Superannuated retainers to a great house, have generally their thoughts taken up with little else.

I had some years ago, an aunt of my own, by name Mrs. Martha Ironside, who would never marry beneath herself, and is supposed to have died a maid in the four-score year of her age. She was the chronicle of our family, and past away the greatest part of the last forty years of her life in recounting the antiquity, marriages, exploits and alliances of the IRONSIDES. Mrs. Martha conversed generally with a knot of old virgins, who were likewise of good families, and had been very cruel all the beginning of the last century. They were every one of them as proud as Lucifer, but said their prayers twice a day, and in all other respects were the best women in the world. If they saw a fine petticoat at church, they immediately took to pieces the pedigree of her that wore it, and would lift up their eyes to heaven at the confidence of the saucy minx, when they found she was an honest tradesman's daughter. It is impossible to describe the pious indignation that would rise in them at the sight of a man who lived plentifully on an estate of his own getting. They were transported with zeal beyond measure, if they heard of a young woman's matching into a great family upon account only of her beauty, her merit, or her money. In short, there was not a female within ten miles of them that was in possession of a gold watch, a pearl necklace, or piece of Mecklin lace, but they examined her title to it. My aunt Martha used to chide me very frequently for not sufficiently valuing myself. She would not eat a bit all dinner-time, if at an invitation she found she had been seated below herself; and would frown upon me for an hour together, if she saw me give place to any man under a Baronet. As I was once talking to her of a wealthy citizen whom she had refused in her youth, she declared to me with great warmth, that she preferred a man of quality in his shirt to the richest man upon the change in a coach and six. She pretended that our family was nearly related by the mother's side to half a dozen Peers; but as none of them knew any thing of the matter, we always kept it as a secret among ourselves. A little before her death she was reciting to me the history of my forefathers; but dwelling a little longer than ordinary upon the actions of Sir Gilbert Ironside, who had a horse shot under him at Edgehill fight, I gave an unfortunate pish, and asked, "What was all this to me?" upon which she retired to her closet, and fell a scribbling for three hours together, in which time, as I afterwards found, she struck me out of her will, and left all she had to my sister Margaret, a wheedling baggage, that used to be asking questions about her great grandfather from morning to night. She now lies buried among the family of the Ironsides, with a stone over her, acquainting the reader, that she died at the age of eighty years, a spinster, and that she was descended of the ancient family of the Ironsides. — After which follows the genealogy drawn up by her own hand.
me

N^o 138 Wednesday, August 19.

Incenditque animum famæ venientis amore.

Virg. Æn. 6. v. 889.

And fires his mind with love of future fame.

There is nothing which I study so much in the course of these my daily dissertations as variety. By this means every one of my readers is sure some time or other to find a subject that pleases him, and almost every paper has some particular set of men for its advocates.

advocates. Instead of seeing the number of my papers every day increas'ing, they would quickly lie as a drug upon my hands, did not I take care to keep up the appetite of my guests, and quicken it from time to time by something new and unexpected. In short, I endeavour to treat my reader in the same manner as Eve does the angel in that beautiful description of Milton.

So saying, with dispatchful looks in haste
 She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent,
 What choice to choose for delicacy best;
 What order, so contrived as not to mix
 Tastes, not well joined, inelegant; but bring
 Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change.
 Whatever earth, all-bearing mother, yields
 In India East or West, or middle shore;
 In Pontus or the Punic coast, or where Alcinous reign'd; fruit of all kinds, in coat
 Rough or smooth-rind, or bearded husk, or shell,
 She gathers, tribute large, and on the board
 Heaps with unsparing hand—— Fifth book.

If by this method, I can furnish out a “Splendida farago,” according to the complement lately paid me in a fine poem published among the exercises of the last Oxford act; I have gained the end, which I propose to myself.

In my yesterday's paper, I showed how the actions of our ancestors and forefathers should excite us to every thing that is great and virtuous. I shall here observe, that a regard to our posterity, and those who are to descend from us, ought to have the same kind of influence on a generous mind. A noble soul would rather die than commit an action that should make his children blush when he is in his grave, and be looked upon as a reproach to those who shall live a hundred years after him. On the contrary, nothing can be a more pleasing thought to a man of eminence, than to consider that his posterity, who lie many removes from him, shall make their boasts of his virtues, and be honoured for his sake.

Virgil represents this consideration as an incentive of glory to Æneas, when after having shown him
 the

the race of heroes who were to descend from him, Anchises adds with a noble warmth,

Et dubitamus adhuc virtutem extendere factis?

Æn. 6. v. 806.

And doubt we yet thro' dangers to pursue
The paths of honour? —

DRYDEN.

Since I have mentioned this passage in Virgil, where Æneas was entertained with the view of his great descendants, I cannot forbear observing a particular beauty, which I do not know that any one has taken notice of. The list which he has there drawn up was in general to do honour to the Roman name, but more particularly to compliment Augustus. For this reason Anchises, who shows Æneas most of the rest of his descendants in the same order, that they were to make their appearance in the world, breaks his method for the sake of Augustus, whom he singles out immediately after having mentioned Romulus, as the most illustrious person who was to rise in that empire which the other had founded. He was impatient to describe his posterity raised to the utmost pitch of glory, and therefore passes over all the rest to come at this great man, whom by this means he implicitly represents as making the most conspicuous figure among them. By this artifice the poet did not only give his Emperor the greatest praise he could bestow upon him; but hindered his reader from drawing a parallel, which would have been disadvantageous to him, had he been celebrated in his proper place, that is, after Pompey and Cæsar, who each of them eclipsed the other in military glory.

Though there have been finer things spoken of Augustus than of any other man, all the wits of his age having tried to outrival one another on that subject; he never received a compliment, which in my opinion, can be compared, for sublimity of thought, to that which the poet here makes him. The English reader may see a faint shadow of it in Mr. Dryden's translation, for the original is inimitable.

Hic vir, hic est, &c.

Æn. 6. v. 791.

But

But next behold the youth of form divine,
 Cæsar himself, exalted in his line;
 Augustus, promis'd oft, and long foretold,
 Sent to the realm that Saturn rul'd of old;
 Born to restore a better age of gold.
 Afric, and India, shall his pow'r obey,
 He shall extend his propagated sway
 Beyond the solar year, without the starry way,
 Where Atlas turns the rolling heav'ns around,
 And his broad shoulders with their lights are crown'd.
 At his foreseen approach, already quake
 The Caspian kingdoms and Mæotian lake.
 Their seers behold the tempest from afar;
 And threatning oracles denounce the war.
 Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates;
 And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephew's fate.
 Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,
 Not though the brazen-footed hind he slew;
 Freed Erymanthus from the foaming boar;
 And dipp'd his arrows in Lernæan gore.
 Nor Bacchus turning from his Indian war,
 By tigers drawn triumphant in his car;
 From Nisus top descending on the plains,
 With curling vines around his purple reins.
 And doubt we yet through dangers to pursue
 The paths of honour?—

I could shew out of other poets the same kind of vision as this in Virgil, wherein the chief persons of the poem have been entertained with the sight of those who were to descend from them: But instead of that, I shall conclude with a Rabbinical story which has in it the oriental way of thinking, and is therefore very amusing.

Adam, say the Rabbins, a little after his creation, was presented with a view of all those souls who were to be united to human bodies, and take their turn after him upon the earth. Among others, the vision set before him the soul of David. Our great ancestor was transported at the sight of so beautiful an apparition; but to his unspeakable grief was informed, that it was not to be conversant among men the space of one year.

Often—

Ostendent terris hunc tantum fata, neque ultra Esse sinent ——— Æn. 6. v. 869.

This youth (the blissful vision of a day)
Shall just be shown on earth, and snatch'd away.
DRYDEN.

Adam, to procure a longer life for so fine a piece of human nature, begged that threescore and ten years (which he heard would be the age of man in David's time) might be taken out of his own life, and added to that of David. Accordingly, say the Rabbins, Adam falls short of a thousand years, which was to have been the complete term of his life, by just so many years as make up the life of David. Adam having lived 930 years, and David 70.

This story was invented to show the high opinion which the Rabbins entertained of this man after God's own heart, whom the prophet, who was his own contemporary, could not mention without rapture, where he records the last poetical composition of David, "of David the son of Jesse, of the man who was raised up on high, of the anointed of the God of Jacob, of the sweet psalmist of Israel."

N^o 139 Thursday, August 20.

——— prisca fides facta, sed fama perennis.
Virg. Æn. 9. v. 79.

——— The fact, thro' length of time obscure,
Is hard to faith: yet shall the fame endure.
DRYDEN.

Most venerable NESTOR.

I Find that every body is very much delighted with the voice of your Lion. His roarings against the tucker have been most melodious and emphatical, It is to be hoped, that the ladies will take warning by them, and not provoke him to greater outrages; for I observe, that your Lion, as you yourself have told
VOL. II. K us,

‘ us, is made up of mouth and paws. For my own part,
‘ I have long considered with myself how I might ex‘ press my gratitude to this noble animal that has so ‘ much the good of our country at his heart. After ‘ many thoughts on this subject, I have at length re‘ solved to do honour to him, by compiling an history
‘ of his species, and extracting out of all authors, what‘ ever may redound to his reputation. In the profecu-
‘ tion of this design, I shall have no manner of regard ‘ to what Æsop has said upon the subject, whom I look ‘ upon to have been a republican by the unworthy treat‘ ment which he often gives to the king of beasts, and ‘ whom, if I had time, I could convict of falshood and ‘ forgery in almost every matter of fact which he has ‘ related of this generous animal. Your romance ‘ writers are likewise a set of men whose authority I shall ‘ build upon very little in this case. They all of them ‘ are born with a particular antipathy to Lions, and ‘ give them no more quarter than they do giants, where-‘ ever they chance to meet them. There is not one of ‘ the seven champions, but when he has nothing else to ‘ do, encounters with a Lion, and you may be sure ‘ always gets the better of him. In short, a knight-‘ errant lives in a perpetual state of enmity with this ‘ noble creature, and hates him more than all things
‘ upon the earth, except a dragon. Had the stories ‘ recorded of them by these writers been true, the ‘ whole species would have been destroyed before now.
‘ After having thus renounced all fabulous authorities,
‘ I shall begin my memoirs of the Lion with a story
‘ related of him by Aulus Gellius, and extracted by him
‘ out of Dion Cassius, an historian of undoubted veracity.
‘ It is the famous story of Androcles the Roman slave,
‘ which I premise for the sake of my learned reader, who ‘ needs go no further in it, if he has read it already.

‘ Androcles was the slave of a noble Roman who ‘ was proconsul of Afric. He had been guilty of a ‘ fault, for which his master would have put him to ‘ death, had not he found an opportunity to escape out ‘ of his hands, and fled into the desarts of Numidia. As ‘ he was wandring among the barren sands, and almost ‘ dead with heat and hunger, he saw a cave in the side of a rock. He went into it, and finding at the farther end of it a place to sit down upon, rested there for some time. At length to his great surprise a huge overgrown Lion entered at the mouth of the cave, and seeing a man at the upper end of it, immediately made towards him. Androcles gave himself for gone; but the Lion instead of treating him as he expected, laid his paw upon his lap, and with a complaining kind of voice fell a licking his hand. Androcles, after having recovered himself a little from the fright he was in, observed the Lion's paw to be exceedingly swelled by a large thorn that stuck in it. He immediately pulled it out, and by squeezing the paw very gently, made a great deal of corrupt matter run out of it, which probably freed the Lion from the great anguish he had felt some time before. The Lion left him upon receiving this good office from him, and soon after returned with a fawn which he had just killed. This he laid down at the feet of his benefactor, and went off again in pursuit of his prey. Androcles, after having sodden the flesh of it by the sun, subsisted upon it until the Lion had supplied him with another. He lived many days in this frightful solitude, the Lion catering for him with great assiduity. Being tired at length with this savage society, he was resolved to deliver himself up into his master's hands, and suffer the worst effects of his displeasure, rather than be thus driven out from mankind. His master, as was customary for the proconsul of Afric, was at that time getting together a present of all the largest Lions that could be found in the country, in order to send them to Rome, that they might furnish out a show to the Roman people. Upon his poor slave's surrendering himself into his hands, he ordered him to be carried away to Rome as soon as the Lions were in readiness to be sent, and that for his crime he should be exposed to fight with one of the Lions in the amphitheatre, as usual, for the diversion of the people. This was all performed accordingly. Androcles, after such a strange run of fortune, was now in the area of the theatre amidst thousands of spectators, expecting every moment when his antagonist would come out upon him

‘ of

‘ him. At length a huge monstrous Lion leaped out ‘ from the place where he had been kept hungry for ‘ the show. He advanced with great rage towards
 ‘ the man, but on a sudden, after having regarded him
 ‘ a little wistfully, fell to the ground, and crept towards ‘ his feet with all the signs of blandishment and caresses.
 ‘ Androcles after a short pause, discovered that it was ‘ his old Numidian friend, and immediately renewed his ‘ acquaintance with him. Their mutual congratulations
 ‘ were very surprizing to the beholders, who, upon hear‘ ing an account of the whole matter from Androcles, ‘ ordered him to be pardoned and the Lion to be given ‘ up into his possession. Androcles returned at Rome
 ‘ the civilities which he had received from him in the ‘ desarts of Afric. Dion Cassius says, that he himself ‘ saw the man leading the Lion about the streets of Rome,
 ‘ the people every where gathering about them, and re‘ peating to one another. “ Hic est leo hospes hominis, “ hic est homo medicus leonis. This is the Lion who “ was the man’s host, this is the man who was the “ Lion’s physician.

N^o 140 Friday, August 21.

——— quibus incendi jam frigidus ævo
Laomedontiades, vel Nestoris bernia possit.

Juv. Sat. 6. v. 324.

A sight, might thaw old Priam’s frozen age,
 And warm ev’n Nestor into amorous rage.

I Have lately received a letter from an astrologer in Moorfields, which I have read with great satisfaction. He observes to me, that my Lion at But-ton’s coffee-house was very luckily erected in the very month when the sun was in Leo. He further adds, that upon conversing with the above-mentioned Mr. Button, whose other name he observes is Daniel, a good omen still

still with regard to the Lion his cohabitant) he had discovered the very hour in which the said Lion was set up; and that by the help of other lights, which he had received from the said Mr. Button, he had been enabled to calculate the nativity of the Lion. This mysterious philosopher acquaints me, that the sign of Leo in the heavens immediately precedes that of Virgo, by which, says he, is signified the natural love and friendship the Lion bears to virginity; and not only to virginity, but to such matrons likewise as are pure and unspotted: from whence he foretels the good influence which the roarings of my Lion are likely to have over the female world, for the purifying of their behaviour, and bettering of their manners. He then proceeds to inform me, that in the most exact astrological schemes, the Lion is observed to affect, in a more particular manner, the legs and the neck, as well as to allay the power of the scorpion in those parts which are allotted to that fiery constellation. From hence he very naturally prognosticates, that my Lion will meet with great success in the attacks he has made on the untuckered stays and short petticoat; and that, in a few months, there will not be a female bosom or ankle uncovered in Great-Britain. He concludes, that by the rules of his art he foresaw five years ago, that both the Pope and myself should about this time unite our endeavours in this particular, and that sundry mutations and revolutions would happen in the female dress.

I have another letter by me from a person of a more volatile and airy genius, who finding this great propension in the fair sex to go uncovered, and thinking it impossible to reclaim them intirely from it, is for compounding the matter with them, and finding out a middle expedient between nakedness and cloathing. He proposes, therefore, that they should imitate their great grandmothers the Briths or Piets, and paint the parts of their bodies which are uncovered with such figures as shall be most to their fancy. The bosom of the coquette, says he, may bear the figure of a Cupid, with a bow in his hand, and his arrow upon the string. The prude might have a Pallas, with a shield and Gorgon's head. In short, by this method, he thinks every woman might make very agreeable discoveries of herself, and at the same time shew us what she would be at. But, by my correspondent's good leave, I can by no means consent to spoil the skin of my pretty country-women. They could find no colours half so charming as those which are natural to them; and though, like the old Piets, they painted the sun itself upon their bodies, they would still change for the worse, and conceal something more beautiful than what they exhibited.

I shall therefore persist in my first design, and endeavour to bring about the reformation in neck and legs, which I have so long aimed at. Let them but raise their stays and let down their petticoats, and I have done. However, as I will give them space to consider of it, I design this for the last time that my Lion shall roar upon the subject during this season, which I give public notice of for the sake of my correspondents, that they may not be at an unnecessary trouble or expence in furnishing me with any informations relating to the tucker before the beginning of next winter, when I may again resume that point, if I find occasion for it. I shall not, however, let it drop without acquainting my reader, that I have written a letter to the pope upon it, in order to encourage him in his present good intentions, and that we may act by concert in this matter. Here follows the copy of my letter.

To Pope Clement the Eighth, NESTOR IRONSIDE, greeting.

Dear Brother,

‘ I Have heard, with great satisfaction, that you
 ‘ I have forbidden your priests to confess any woman ‘ who appears before them without a tucker, in which ‘ you please me well. I do agree with you, that it is ‘ impossible for the good man to discharge his office,
 ‘ as he ought, who gives an ear to those alluring
 ‘ penitents that discover their hearts and necks to him
 ‘ at the same time. I am labouring as much as in me ‘ lies to stir up the same spirit of modesty among the ‘ women of this island, and should be glad we might ‘ assist one another in so good a work. In order to it, I ‘ desire

‘ desire that you would send me over the length of a ‘ Roman Lady’s neck, as it stood before your late pro‘ hibition. We have some here who have necks of one,
‘ two and three foot in length, some that have necks
‘ which reach down to their middles, and, indeed, some ‘ who may be said to be all neck and no body. I hope,
‘ at the same time you observe the stays of your female ‘ subjects, that you have also an eye to their petticoats,
‘ which rise in this island daily. When the petticoat ‘ reaches but to the knee, and the stays fall to the fifth ‘ rib which I hear is to be the standard of each, as it ‘ has been lately settled in a junto of the sex) I will ‘ take care to send you one of either sort, which I ad‘ vertise you of before-hand, that you may not compute
‘ the stature of our English women from the length of ‘ their garments. In the mean time I have desired the ‘ master of a vessel, who tells me that he shall touch at ‘ Civita Vecchia, to present you with a certain female ‘ machine which, I believe, will puzzle your infallibility
‘ to discover the use of it. Not to keep you in suspense,
‘ it is what we call in this country a hooped-petticoat.
‘ I shall only beg of you to let me know, whether you ‘ find any garment of this nature among all the relicks
‘ of your female saints, and in particular, whether it was ‘ ever worn by any of your twenty thousand virgin ‘ martyrs.

Yours, usque ad aras,

NESTOR IRONSIDE.

I must not dismiss this letter without declaring myself a good protestant, as I hint in the subscribing part of it. This I think necessary to take notice of, lest I should be accused by an author of unexampled stupidity, for corresponding with the head of the Romish church.

N^o 141 Saturday, August 22.

*Frangere, miser, calamos, vigilataque prœlia dele,
Qui facis in parvâ sublimia carmina cellâ,
Ut dignus venias hederis, & imagine macrâ.*

Juv. Sat. 7. v. 27.

Let flames on your unlucky papers prey,
Or moths thro' written pages eat their way;
Your wars, your loves, your praises be forgot;
And make of all an universal blot——
The rest is empty praise, an ivy crown,
Or the lean statue of a mean renown.

CH. DRYDEN.

“WIT,” saith the Bishop of Rochester in his elegant sermon against the scorner, “as it implies a certain uncommon reach and vivacity of thought, is an excellent talent, very fit to be employed in the search of truth, and very capable of assisting us to discern and embrace it.” I shall take leave to carry this observation farther into common life, and remark, that it is a faculty, when properly directed, very fit to recommend young persons to the favour of such patrons, as are generously studious to promote the interest of politeness, and the honour of their country. I am therefore much grieved to hear the frequent complaints of some rising authors whom I have taken under my guardianship. Since my circumstances will not allow me to give them due encouragement, I must take upon me the person of a philosopher, and make them a present of my advice. I would not have any poet whatsoever, who is not born to five hundred a year, deliver himself up to wit, but as it is subservient to the improvement of his fortune. This talent is useful in all professions, and should be considered not as a wife, but as an attendant. Let them take an old man’s word; the desire of fame grows languid in a few years, and thoughts of ease and convenience erase the the fairy images of glory and honour. Even those who have succeeded both in fame and fortune, look back on the petty trifles of their youth with some regret, when their minds are turned to more exalted and useful speculations. This is admirably express'd in the following lines, by an author, whom I have formerly done justice to on the account of his pastoral poems.

In search of wisdom far from wit I fly;
Wit is a harlot, beauteous to the eye,
In whose bewitching arms our early time
We waste, and vigour of our youthful prime:
But when reflection comes with riper years,
And manhood with a thoughtful brow appears;
We cast the mistress off to take a wife,
And, wed to wisdom, lead a happy life.

A passage which happened to me some years ago confirmed several maxims of frugality in my mind. A woollen-draper of my acquaintance, remarkable for his learning and good-nature, pulled out his pocket-book, wherein he shewed me at the one end several well-chosen mottos, and several patterns of cloth at the other. —I, like a well-bred man, praised both sorts of goods: whereupon he tore out the mottos, and generously gave them to me; but, with great prudence, put up the patterns in his pocket again.

I am sensible that any accounts of my own secret history can have but little weight with young men of sanguine expectations. I shall therefore take this opportunity to present my wards with the history of an ancient Greek poet, which was sent me from the library of Fez, and is to be found there in the end of a very ancient manuscript of Homer's works, which was brought by the Barbarians from Constantinople. The name of the poet is torn out, nor have the critics yet determined it. I have faithfully translated part of it, and desire that it may be diligently perused by all men who design to live by their wits.

'I was born at the foot of a certain mountain in Greece
' called Parnassus, where the country is remarkably de' licious. My mother, while she was with child of me,

‘ longed for laurel leaves ; and as I lay in my cradle, a ‘ swarm of bees settled about my mouth, without doing ‘ me any injury. These were looked upon as presages of ‘ my being a great man ; and the early promises I gave
‘ of a quick wit and lively fancy, confirmed the high ‘ opinion my friends had conceived of me. It would be ‘ an idle tale to relate the trifling adventures of my ‘ youth, until I arrived at my twentieth year. It was ‘ then that the love I bore to a beautiful young virgin,
‘ with whom I had innocently and familiarly conversed ‘ from my childhood, became the public talk of our ‘ village. I was so taken up with my passion, that I ‘ intirely neglected all other affairs : And though the ‘ daughter of Machaon the physician, and a rich heiress,
‘ the daughter of a famous Grecian orator, were offer‘ ed me in marriage, I peremptorily refused both the ‘ matches, and rashly vowed to live and die with the ‘ lovely Polyhymnia. In vain did my parents remonstrate
‘ to me, that the tradition of her being descended from ‘ the Gods was too poor a portion for one of my narrow ‘ fortunes ; that except her fine green-house and garden, ‘ she had not one foot of land ; and though she should ‘ gain the law-suit about the summit of Parnassus, ‘ (which yet had many pretenders to it) that the air was ‘ so bleak there, and the ground so barren, that it would ‘ certainly starve the possessor. I fear my obstinacy in ‘ this particular broke my mother’s heart, who died a ‘ short time after, and was soon followed by my farther.

‘ I now found myself at liberty, and, notwithstanding
‘ the opposition of a great many rivals, I won and en‘ joyed Polyhymnia. Our amour was known to the ‘ whole country, and all, who saw, extolled the beauty
‘ of my mistress, and pronounced me happy, in the pos‘ session of so many charms. We lived in great splen‘ dor and gait, I being persuaded that high living was ‘ necessary to keep up my reputation and the beauty of ‘ my mistress ; from whom I had daily expectations
‘ given me of a post in the government, or some lavish
‘ present from the great men of our commonwealth. I ‘ was so proud of my partner, that I was perpetually ‘ bringing company to see her, and was a little tiresome
‘ to my acquaintance, by talking continually of her ‘ several

‘ several beauties. She herself had a most exalted conceit of her charms, and often invited the Ladies to ask their opinions of her dress; which if they disapproved in any particular, she called them a pack of envious insipid things, and ridiculed them in all companies. She had a delicate set of teeth, which appeared most to advantage when she was angry; and therefore she was very often in a passion. By this imprudent behaviour, when we had run out of our money, we had no living soul to befriend us; and every body cried out, it was a judgment upon me for being a slave to such a proud minx, such a conceited hussy.

‘ I loved her passionately, and exclaimed against a blind and injudicious world. Besides, I had several children by her, and was likely still to have more; for I always thought the youngest the most beautiful. I must not forget that a certain great Lord offered me a considerable sum in my necessity, to have the reputation of fathering one of them; but I rejected his offer with disdain. In order to support her family and vanities, she carried me to Athens; where she put me upon a hundred pranks to get money. Sometimes she dressed me in an antic robe and placed a diadem on my head, and made me gather a mob about me by talking in a blustering tone, and unintelligible language. Sometimes she made me foam at the mouth, roll my eyes, invoke the gods, and act a sort of madness which the Athenians call the Pindarism. At another time she put a sheephook into my hand, and drove me round my garret, calling it the plains of Arcadia. When these projects failed, she gave out, with good success, that I was an old astrologer; after that a dumb man; and last of all she made me pass for a lion.

‘ It may seem strange, that, after so tedious a slavery, I should ever get my freedom. But so it happened, that during the three last transformations, I grew acquainted with the Lady Sophia, whose superior charms cooled my passion for Polyhymnia; insomuch that some envious dull fellows gave it out, my mistress had jilted and left me. But the slanders of my enemies were silenced by my public espousal of Sophia; who,

‘ who, with a greatness of soul, void of all jealousy’
 ‘ hath taken Polyhymnia for her woman, and is dressed’
 ‘ by her every day.’

N^o 142 Monday, August 24.

— pacis mala : sævior armis

Luxuria incubuit, victumque ulciscitur—

Juv. Sat. 6. v. 291.

— Th’ inveterate ills of peace,
 And wasteful riot; whose destructive charms
 Revenge the vanquish’d— DRYDEN.

BEING obliged, at present, to attend a particular affair of my own, I do empower my printer to look into the Arcana of the Lion, and select out of them such as may be of public utility; and Mr. Button is hereby authorised and commanded to give my said printer free ingress and egress to the Lion, without any hindrance, let, or molestation whatsoever, until such time as he shall receive orders to the contrary. And for so doing this shall be his warrant.

NESTOR IRONSIDE.

“ By virtue of the foregoing order, the Lion has been “ carefully examined, and the two following papers “ being found upon him, are thought very proper for “ public use.”

“ Given in at the Lion’s mouth at six of the clock
 “ in the morning.”

Mr. IRONSIDE,

‘ I Came very early this morning to rouse your Lion, ‘ thinking it the properest time to offer him trash when ‘ his stomach was empty and sharp set; and being in‘ formed too that he is so very modest, as to be shy of ‘ swallowing any thing before much company, and not ‘ without some other politic views, the principal of ‘ which was, that his digestion being then the most keen
 ‘ and

‘ and vigorous, it might probably refine this raw piece
‘ from several of its crudities, and so make it proper ‘ food for his master; for as great Princes keep their ‘ taster, so I perceive you keep your digester, having ‘ an appetite peculiarly turned for delicacies. If a fel‘ low-feeling and similitude of employment, are any mo‘ tives to engage your attention, I may for once promise ‘ myself a favourable hearing. By the account you have ‘ given us of the Sparkler, and your other female wards,
‘ I am pretty confident you cannot be a stranger to the ‘ many great difficulties there are in weaning a young ‘ lady’s inclination from a frolick which she is fully ‘ bent upon. I am Guardian to a young heiress, whose ‘ conduct I am more than ordinary solicitous to keep ‘ steady in the slippery age we live in. I must confess ‘ miss hath hitherto been very tractable and toward,
‘ considering she is an heiress, and now upon the brink
‘ of fifteen: But here of late Tom Whirligig has so turned ‘ her head with the gallantries of a late masquerade,
‘ (which no doubt Tom, according to his usual vivacity, ‘ set forth, in all its gayest colours;) that the young ‘ creature has been perfectly giddy ever since, and so ‘ set agog with the thoughts of it, that I am teased to ‘ death by her importuning me to let her go to the next.
‘ In the mean time, I have surprised her more than ‘ once or twice very busy in pulling all her clothes to ‘ pieces, in order to make up a strange dress, and with ‘ much ado have reprieved them from her merciless ‘ scissars. Now you must understand, old IRON, I ‘ am very loth to trust her all alone into such an ocean
‘ of temptations. I have made use of all manner of ‘ dissuatives to her, and have sufficiently demonstrated
‘ to her, that the devil first addressed himself to Eve
‘ in a mask, and that we owe the loss of our first ‘ happy state to a masquerade, which that sly intriguer ‘ made in the garden, where he seduced her; but she ‘ does not at all regard all this, the passion of curiosity ‘ is as predominant in her as ever it was in her pre‘ decessor. Therefore I appeal, sage NESTOR, to ‘ your experienced age, whether these nocturnal as-‘ semblies have not a bad tendency, to give a loose ‘ turn to a young lady’s imagination. For the being
‘ in

‘ in disguise takes away the usual checks and restraints
‘ of modesty ; and consequently the beaux do not blush
‘ to talk wantonly, nor the belles to listen ; the one as ‘ greedily sucks in the poison, as the other industriously
‘ infuses it ; and I am apt to think too, that the ladies ‘ might possibly forget their own selves in such strange ‘ dresses, and do that in a personated character which ‘ may stain their real ones. A young milk-maid may ‘ indulge herself in the innocent freedom of a green-‘ gown ; and a shepherdess, without thinking any harm,
‘ may lie down with a shepherd on a mossy bank ; and ‘ all this while poor Sylvia may be so far lost in the pleas‘ ing thoughts of her new romantic attire, and Da‘ mon’s soft endearing language, as never once to reflect
‘ who she is, until the romance is completed. Besides, do
‘ but consider, dear NESTOR, when a young lady’s
‘ spirits are fermented with sparkling champaign, her ‘ heart opened and dilated by the attractive gaiety of ‘ every thing about her, her soul melted away by the soft ‘ airs of music and the gentle powers of motion ; in a ‘ word, the whole woman dissolved in a luxury of plea‘ sure : I say, in such critical circumstances, in such un‘ guarded moments, how easy is it for a young thing
‘ to be led aside by her stars. Therefore, good Mr.
‘ IRONSIDE, set your Lion a roaring against these ‘ dangerous assemblies : I can assure you, one good loud
‘ roar will be sufficient to deter my ward from them,
‘ for she is naturally mighty fearful, and has been always ‘ used from her childhood to be frightened into good ‘ behaviour. And it may prove too some benefit to ‘ yourself in the management of your own females,
‘ who, if they are not already, I do not at all question
‘ but they will be very shortly gadding after these mid‘ night gambols. Therefore, to promote your own ‘ peace and quietness, as well as mine, and the safety
‘ of all young virgins, pray order your Lion to exert
‘ his loudest notes against maskerales ; I am sure it ‘ would be a perfect concert to all good mothers, and ‘ particularly charm the ears of your faithful friend and companion,

OLD RUSTIDES.

Most

Most worthy S I R,

‘ BEing informed that the evites daily increase, and ‘ that fig-leaves are shortly coming into fashion;
‘ I have hired me a piece of ground and planted it with ‘ fig-trees, the soil being naturally productive of them.
‘ I hope, good Sir, you will so far encourage my new ‘ project, as to acquaint the ladies, that I have now by ‘ me a choice collection of fig-leaves of all sorts and ‘ sizes, of a delicate texture and a lovely bright verdure, ‘ beautifully scolloped at the extremities, and most curi‘ ously wrought with variety of slender fibres ranged ‘ in beautiful meanders and windings. I have some ‘ very cool ones for summer, so transparently thin,
‘ that you may see through them, and others of a ‘ thicker substance for winter; I have likewise some ‘ very small ones of a particular species for little misses.
‘ So that I do not question but to give general satisfac‘ tion to all ladies whatsoever, that please to repair to ‘ me at the sign of the Adam and Eve near Cupid’s-
‘ Gardens. If you will favour me with the insertion
‘ of this in your GUARDIAN, I will make your fa‘ vourite, the Sparkler, a present of some of the choicest
‘ fig-leaves I have, and lay before her feet the primi‘ tias of my new garden; and if you bring me a great ‘ many customers for my leaves, I promise you my figs
‘ shall be at your service.

I am, worthy Sir,

your worship’s most obedient

humble servant,

ANTHONY EVER-GREEN.

N. B. ‘ I am now rearing up a set of fine furbelowed ‘ dock-leaves, which will be exceeding proper for old ‘ women and superannuated maids; those plants having ‘ two excellent good properties; the one, that they flou‘ rish best in dry ground; the other, that being clothed ‘ with several integuments of downy surfaces, they are ‘ exceeding warm and cherishing.’

Tuesday,

N^o 143 Tuesday, August 25.

Quis fuit, horrendos primus qui protulit enses?

Quàm ferus, & verè ferreus ille fuit!

Tibul. Eleg. 10. l. 1. v. 1.

Who first, with skill inhuman, did produce,
And teach mankind, the sword's destructive use?
What sense of pity could the monster feel!
Himself relentless as the murd'rous steel!

Notwithstanding the levity of the pun, which is in the second line of my motto, the subject I am going upon is of the most serious consequence, and concerns no less than the peace and quiet, and (for ought I know) the very life and safety, of every inoffensive and well disposed inhabitant of this city. Frequent complaints have been made to me, by men of discretion and sobriety, in most of the coffee-houses from St. James's to Jonathan's, that there is sprung up of late a very numerous race of young fellows about the town, who have the confidence to walk the streets, and come into all public places in open day-light, with swords of such immoderate length, as strike terror into a great many of her Majesty's good subjects. Besides this, half a dozen of this fraternity in a room or a narrow street, are as inconvenient as so many turnstiles, because you can pass neither backward nor forward, until you have first put their weapons aside. When Jack Lizard made his first trip to town from the university, he thought he could never bring up with him too much of the Gentleman; this I soon perceived in the first visit he made me, when I remember, he came scraping in at the door, encumbered with a bar of cold iron so irksomely long, that it banged against his calf and jarred upon his right heel, as he walked, and came rattling behind him as he ran down the stairs. But his sister Annabella's rally soon cured him of this awkward awkward air, by telling him that his sword was only fit for going up stairs, or walking up hill, and that she shrewdly suspected he had stolen it out of the college-kitchen.

But to return to the public grievance of this city; it is very remarkable, that these "brothers of the blade" began to appear upon the first suspension of arms; and that since the conclusion of the peace the order is very much increased, both as to the number of the men, and the size of their weapons. I am informed, that these men of preposterous bravery, who affect a military air in a profound peace, and dare to look terrible amongst their friends and fellow-citizens, have formed a plan to erect themselves into a society, under the name of the Terrible Club; and that they entertain hopes of getting the great armory-hall in the Tower for their club-room. Upon this I have made it my business to inquire more particularly into the cabals of these hectors; and by the help of my Lion, I have got such informations as will enable me to countermine their designs, together with a copy of some fundamental articles drawn up by three of their ringleaders; the which it seems are to be augmented and assented to by the rest of the gang on the first of January next (if not timely prevented) at a general meeting in the Sword-cutlers hall. I shall at present (to let them see that they are not unobserved) content myself with publishing only the said articles.

Articles to be agreed upon by the members of the Terrible Club.

Imprimis, That the club do meet at midnight in the great armory-hall in the Tower, (if leave can be obtained) the first Monday in every month.

II. That the president be seated upon a drum at the upper end of the table, accoutred with a helmet, a basket-hilt sword, and a buff-belt.

III. That the president be always obliged to provide, for the first and standing dish of the club, a patty of bull beef, baked in a target made for that purpose.

IV. That the members do cut their meat with bayonets instead of knives.

V. That

V. That every member do sit to the table, and eat with his hat, his sword and his gloves on.

VI. That there be no liquor drank but rack-punch, quickned with brandy and gun-powder.

VII. That a large mortar be made use of for a punch-bowl.

In all appearance it could be no other than a member of this club, who came last week to Button's, and sat over-against the Lion with such a settled fierceness in his countenance, as if he came to vie with that animal in sternness of looks. His stature was somewhat low; his motions quick and smart, and might be mistaken for startings and convulsions. He wore a broad stiff hat, cudgel-proof, with an edging three-fingers deep, trussed up into the fierce trooper's cock: To this was added a dark wig, very moderately curled, and tied in two large knots up to his ears; his coat was short, and rich in tarnished lace; his nostrils and his upper lip were all begrimmed with snuff. At first I was in hopes the Gentleman's friends took care not to intrust him with any weapon; until, looking down, I could perceive a sword of a most unwarrantable size, that hung carelessly below his knee, with two large tassels at the hilt, that played about his ancles.

I must confess I cannot help shrewdly suspecting the courage of the Terribles. I beg pardon if I am in the wrong when I think, that the long sword, and the swaggering cock, are the ordinary disguises of a faint heart. These men while they think to impose terror upon others, do but render themselves contemptible; their very dress tells you that they are surrounded with fears, that they live in Hobbs's state of nature, and that they are never free from apprehensions. I dare say, if one were to look into the hearts of these champions, one should find there a great tendency to go cased in armour, and that nothing but the fear of a stronger ridicule restrains them from it. A brave man scorns to wear any thing, that may give him an advantage over his neighbour; his great glory is neither to fear nor to be feared. I remember, when I was abroad, to have seen a buffoon in an opera, whose excessive cowardise never

never failed to set the whole audience into a loud laughter: But the scene which seemed to divert them most, was that in which he came on with a sword that reached quite across the stage, and was put to flight by an adversary, whose stature was not above four foot high, and whose weapon was not three foot long. This brings to my mind what I have formerly read of a King of Arabia, who shewing a rich sword, that had been presented to him, his courtiers unanimously gave their opinion, that it had no other fault, but that of being too short; upon which the King's son said, that there was no weapon too short for a brave man, since there needed no more but to advance one step to make it long enough. To this I shall subjoin, by way of corollary, that there is no weapon long enough for a coward, who never thinks himself secure while he is within sight of his adversary's point. I would therefore advise these men of distant courage, as they tender their honour, to shorten their dimensions, and reduce their tilts to a more reputable, as well as a more portable size.

N^o 144

Wednesday, August 26.

Sua cuique quum sit animi cogitatio,Colorque privus—

Phædr. Prol. l. 5. v. 7.

Every man has his particular way of thinking and acting.

IT is a very just, and a common observation upon the natives of this island, that in their different degrees, and in their several professions and employments, they abound as much and perhaps more, in good sense, than any people; and yet, at the same time there is scarce an Englishman of any life and spirit, that has not some odd cast of thought, some original humour that distinguishes him from his neighbour. Hence it is that our comedies are enriched with such a diversity of characters, as is not to be seen upon any other theatre
in

in Europe. Even in the maskerales that have been lately given to the town (though they are diversions we are not accustomed to) the singularities of dress were carried much farther than is usual in foreign countries, where the natives are trained up, as it were, from their infancy to those amusements. The very same measure of understanding, the very same accomplishments, the very same defects, shall, amongst us, appear under a quite different aspect in one man, to what they do in another. This makes it as impracticable to foreigners to enter into a thorough knowledge of the English, as it would be to learn the Chinese language, in which there is a different character for every individual word. I know not how to explain this vein of humour so obvious in my countrymen better, than by comparing it to what the French call "Le goût du terroir" in wines; by which they mean the different flavour one and the same grape shall draw from the different soils in which it is planted. This national mark is visible amongst us in every rank and degree of men, from the persons of the first quality and politest sense, down to the rudest and most ignorant of the people. Every mechanic has a peculiar cast of head and turn of wit, or some uncommon whim, as a characteristic, that distinguishes him from others of his trade, as well as from the multitudes that are upon a level with him. We have a small-coalman, who from beginning with two plain notes, which made up his daily cry, has made himself master of the whole compass of the gamut, and has frequent concerts of music at his own house for the entertainment of himself and his friends. There is a person of great hospitality, who lives in a plastered cottage upon the road to hamstead, and gets a superfluity of wealth, by accommodating holiday passengers with ale, brandy, pipes, tobacco, cakes, ginger-bread, apples, pears, and other small refreshments of life; and on worky-days takes the air in his chaise, and recreates himself with the elegant pleasures of the Beau-monde. The shining men amongst our mob, dignified by the title of ringleaders, have an inexhaustible fund of archness and rallery; as likewise have our sailors and watermen. Our very street-beggars are not without their peculiar oddities, oddities, as the schoolmen term them. The other day a tattered wag followed me across the Meuse with, "One farthing or half-penny, good your honour, do your honour; and I shall make bold to pray for you."

Shakespear (who was a great copier of nature) whenever he introduces any artificers, or low characters into his plays, never fails to dash them strongly with some distinguishing stain of humour, as may be seen more remarkably in the scene of the grave-diggers in Hamlet.

Though this singularity of temper, which runs through the generality of us, may make us seem whimsical to strangers; yet it furnishes out a perpetual change of entertainment to ourselves, and diversifies all our conversations with such a variety of mirth, as is not to be met with in any other country. Sir William Temple in his Essay upon Poetry, endeavours to account for the British humours in the following manner:

' This may proceed from the native plenty of our ' soil, the unequalness of our climate, as well as the ' ease of our government, and the liberty of professing
' opinions and factions, which perhaps our neighbours
' have about them, but are forced to disguise, and there' by may come in time to be extinguished. Thus we ' come to have more originals, and more that appear
' what they are: We have more humour, because every ' man follows his own, and takes a pleasure, perhaps a
' pride to shew it. On the contrary, where the people ' are generally poor, and forced to hard labour, their ' actions and lives are all of a piece: Where they serve
' hard masters, they must follow their examples, as well
' as commands, and are forced upon imitation in small
' matters, as well as obedience in great: So that some ' nations look as if they were cast all by one mould, or ' cut out all by one pattern (at least the common ' people in one, and the Gentlemen in another.) They ' seem all of a sort in their habits, their customs, and
' even their talk and conversation, as well as in the ' application and pursuit of their actions, and their ' lives. Besides all this, there is another sort of va' riety amongst us, which arises from our climate, and
' the dispositions it naturally produces. We are not ' only more unlike one another, than any nation I ' know

‘ know; but we are more unlike ourselves too, at several times, and owe to our very air some ill qualities, as well as many good.’

Ours is the only country, perhaps in the whole world, where every man, rich and poor, dares to have a humour of his own, and to avow it upon all occasions. I make no doubt, but that it is to this great freedom of temper, and this unconstrained manner of living that we owe, in a great measure the number of shining genius’s, which rise up amongst us from time to time, in the several arts and sciences, for the service and for the ornament of life. This frank and generous disposition in a people, will likewise never fail to keep up in their minds an aversion to slavery, and be, as it were, a standing bulwark of their liberties. So long as ever wit and humour continues, and the generality of us will have their own way of thinking, speaking and acting, this nation is not like to give any quarter to an invader, and much less to bear with the absurdities of popery, in exchange for an established and a reasonable faith.

N^o 145 Thursday, August 27.

Jura neget sibi nata, nihil non arroget armis.

Hor. Ars Poet. v. 122.

Scorning all judges, and all law, but arms.

ROSCOMMON.

AMongst the several challenges and letters which my paper of the twentyfifth has brought upon me, there happens to be one, which I know not well what to make of. I am doubtful whether it is the archness of some wag, or the serious resentment of a coxcomb, that vents his indignation with an insipid pertness. In either of these two lights I think it may divert my readers, for which reason I shall make no scruple to comply with the Gentleman’s request, and make his letter public.

Old TESTY,

Tilt-yard Coffee-house.

‘ Your grey hairs for once shall be your protection,
 ‘ and this billet a fair warning to you for your ‘ audacious rallery upon the dignity of long swords.
 ‘ Look to it for the future; consider we brothers of the ‘ Blade are men of a “long reach.” Think betimes,

How many perils do environ

The man that meddles with cold iron.

‘ It has always been held dangerous to play with edge‘ tools. I grant you, we men of valour are but auk‘ ward jesters; we know not how to repay joke for ‘ joke; but then we always make up in point what we ‘ want in wit. He that shall rashly attempt to regulate ‘ our hilts, or reduce our blades, had need to have a heart ‘ of oak, as well as “Sides of Iron.” Thus much for ‘ the present. In the mean time Bilbo is the word, re‘ member that and tremble.

THO. SWAGGER.

This jocosse manner of bullying an old man, so long as it affords some entertainment to my friends, is what I shall not go about to discourage. However my witty antagonist must give me leave, since he attacks me in proverbs, to exchange a thrust or two with him at the same weapons; and so let me tell Mr. Swagger, “There is no catching old birds with chaff;” and that “Brag is a good dog, but Hold-fast is a better.” “Fore-warned, fore-armed.” Having dispatched this combatant, and given him as good as he brings, I proceed to exhibit the case of a person who is the very reverse of the former; the which he lays before me in the following epistle.

Worthy S I R,

‘ I Am the most unfortunate of men, if you do not ‘ speedily interpose with your authority in behalf of ‘ a Gentleman, who, by his own example, has for these six ‘ months endeavoured, at the peril of his life, to bring ‘ little swords into fashion, in hopes to prevail upon the ‘ gentry by that means (winning them over inch by inch)
 ‘ to appear without any swords at all. It was my mis‘ fortune

‘ fortune to call in at Tom’s last night, a little fuddled,
 ‘ where I happened only to point towards an odd fellow ‘ with a monstrous sword, that made a ring round him, ‘ as he turned upon his heel to speak to one or other in ‘ the room. Upon this Peccadillo the bloody-minded ‘ villain has sent me a challenge this morning. I trem‘ ble at the very thought of it, and am sick with the ‘ apprehension of seeing that weapon naked, which ter‘ rified me in the scabbard. The unconscionable ruffian ‘ desires, in the most civil terms he may have the ho‘ nour of measuring swords with me. Alas, Sir, mine ‘ is not (hilt and all) above a foot and a half. I take ‘ the liberty of inclosing it to you in my wig-box, and ‘ shall be eternally obliged to you, if, upon sight of it,
 ‘ your compassion may be so far moved, as to occasion
 ‘ you to write a good word for me to my adversary, or ‘ to say any thing that may shame him into reason, and ‘ save at once the life and reputation of,

S I R, your most devoted slave,

TIMOTHY BODKIN.

Good Mr. BODKIN,

THE perusal of this paper will give you to understand, that your letter, together with the little implement you sent me in the band-box, came safe to my hands. From the dimensions of it I perceive your courage lies in a narrow compass. Suppose you should send this bravo the fellow to it, and desire him to meet you in a closet, letting him know, at the same time, that you fight all your duels under lock and key for the sake of privacy. But, if this proposal seems a little too rash,
 I shall send my servant with your sword to the person offended, and give him instructions to tell him, you are a little pur-blind, and dare not for that reason trust to a longer weapon, and that an inch in his body will do your business as well as an ell: Or, if you would have me proceed yet more cautiously, my servant shall let him know, as from me, that he should meddle with his match; and that alone, if he be a man of honour, will make him reflect; if otherwise (as I am very inclinable to doubt it) you need give yourself no farther unnecessary fears;
 but

but rely upon the truth of my remarks upon the Terribles. I have bethought myself of one expedient more for you, which seems to be the most likely to succeed. Send your own servant to wait upon the gentleman. Let him carry with him your sword, and a letter, in which you tell him, that admiring the magnificence and grandeur of his weapon at Tom's, you thought it great pity so gallant a cavalier should not be completely armed; for which reason you humbly request, that you may have the honour of presenting him with a dagger.

I am, S I R,

Your faithful servant,

NESTOR IRONSIDE.

I received a letter last week from one of my female wards, who subscribes herself Teraminta. She seems to be a lady of great delicacy, by the concern she shows for the loss of a small covering, which the generality of the sex have laid aside. She is in pain, and full of those fears, which are natural in a state of virginity, lest any, the smallest part of her linen, should be in the possession of a man. In compliance therefore with her request, and to gratify her modesty so far as lies in my power, I have given orders to my printer to make room for her advertisement in this day's paper.

A D V E R T I S E M E N T.

August 19. “Whereas a Modesty-Piece was lost at “the masquerade last Monday night, being the 17th instant, “between the hours of twelve and one, the author “of this paper gives notice, that if any person will put “it into the hands of Mr. Daniel Button, to be returned “to the owner, it shall by her be acknowledged as the “last favour, and no questions asked.

“N. B. It is of no use but to the owner.”

N^o 146 Friday, August 28.

Primus hominum Leonem manu tractare ausus, & ostendere mansuefactum, Hanno è clarissimis Pœnorum traditur.

PLIN.

Hanno, a noble Carthaginian, is reported to have been the first man, who ventured to handle a Lion, and bring him up tame.

THE generality of my readers, I find, are so well pleased with the story of the Lion, in my paper of the twentieth instant, and with my friend's design of compiling a history of that noble species of animals; that a great many ingenious persons have promised me their assistance to bring in materials for the work, from all the storehouses of ancient and modern learning, as well as from oral tradition. For a farther encouragement of the undertaking, a considerable number of virtuosi have offered, when my collection shall swell into a reasonable bulk, to contribute very handsomely, by way of subscription, towards the printing of them in Folio, on a large royal paper, curiously adorned with variety of forests, desarts, rocks and caves, and lions of all sorts and sizes upon copper-plates by the best hands. A rich old bachelor of Lion's-Inn, (who is zealous for the honour of the place in which he was educated) sends me word, I may depend upon a hundred pounds from him, towards the embellishing of the work; assuring me, at the same time, that he will set his clerk to search the records, and inquire into the antiquities of that house, that there may be no stone left unturned to make the book complete. Considering the volumes that have been written upon insects and reptiles, and the vast expence and pains some philosophers have been at to discover, by the help of glasses, their almost imperceptible qualities and perfections; it will not, I hope, be thought unreasonable, if the Lion (whose majestick

majestick form lies open to the naked eye) should take up a first rate Folio.

A worthy merchant, and a friend of mine, sends me the following letter, to be inserted in my commentaries upon Lions.

S I R,

‘ Since one of your correspondents, has, of late ‘ entertained the publick with a very remarkable
 ‘ and ancient piece of history, in honour of the grandees
 ‘ of the forest; and since it is probable you may in time
 ‘ collect a great many curious records and amazing cir‘ cumstances, which may contribute to make these ani‘ mals respected over the face of the whole earth; I ‘ am not a little ambitious to have the glory of contri‘ buting somewhat to so generous an undertaking. If ‘ you throw your work into the form of chionicle, I ‘ am in hopes I may furnish out a page in it towards the ‘ latter end of the volume, by a narration of a modern ‘ date, which I had in the year 17co, from the gentle‘ man to whom it happened.

‘ About sixty years ago, when the plague raged
 ‘ at Naples, Sir George Davis (consul there for the ‘ English nation) retired to Florence. It happened one ‘ day he went out of curiosity to see the great duke’s
 ‘ Lions. At the farther end, in one of the dens, lay
 ‘ a Lion, which the keepers in three years time could ‘ not tame, with all the art and gentle usage imaginable.
 ‘ Sir George no sconer appeared at the grates of the ‘ den, but the Lion ran to him with all the marks of ‘ joy and transport he was capable of expressing: He ‘ reared himself up and licked his hand, which this ‘ gentleman put in through the grates. The keeper ‘ affrighted, took him by the arm and pulled him away, ‘ begging him not to hazard his life by going so near ‘ the fiercest creature of that kind, that ever entered ‘ those dens. However, nothing would satisfy Sir ‘ George, notwithstanding all that could be said to dis‘ suade him, but he must go into the den to him. The ‘ very instant he entered, the Lion threw his paws upon ‘ his shoulders, and licked his face, and ran to and fro
 ‘ in the den, fawning, and full of joy, like a dog at

‘ the sight of his master. After several embraces and ‘ salutations exchanged on both sides, they parted very ‘ good friends. The rumour of this interview between ‘ the Lion and the stranger rung immediately through
‘ the whole city, and Sir George was very near passing ‘ for a saint among the people. The great duke, when ‘ he heard of it sent for Sir George, who waited upon ‘ his highness to the den, and to satisfy his curiosity,
‘ gave him the following account of what seemed so ‘ strange to the duke and his followers.

‘ A captain of a ship from Barbary gave me this ‘ Lion when he was a young whelp. I brought him up ‘ tame; but when I thought him too large to be suf‘ fered to run about the house, I built a den for him in ‘ my court-yard; from that time he was never permit‘ ted to go loose, except when I brought him within ‘ doors to shew him to my friends. When he was five ‘ years old, in his gamesome tricks, he did some mischief
‘ by pawing and playing with people: Having griped
‘ a man one day a little too hard, I ordered him to be ‘ shot, for fear of incurring the guilt of what might ‘ happen; upon this, a friend, who was then at dinner
‘ with me begged him: How he came here I know not.

‘ Here Sir George Davis ended; and thereupon the ‘ duke of Tuscany assured him, that he had the Lion
‘ from that very friend of his.

I am, SIR,

your most obedient servant,

and constant reader, &c.

Saturday,

N^o 147 Saturday, August 29.

Bonum est, fugienda aspicere alieno in malo. Publ. Syr.

It is a good thing to learn caution by the misfortunes of others.

HAVING in my paper of the 21st of July, shewed my dislike of the ridiculous custom of garnishing a new-married couple, and setting a gloss upon their persons which is to last no longer than the honey-moon; I think it may be much for the emolument of my disciples of both sexes, to make them sensible, in the next place, of the folly of lanching out into extravagant expences, and a more magnificent way of living immediately upon marriage. If the bride and bridegroom happen to be persons of any rank, they come into all publick places, and go upon all visits with so gay an equipage, and so glittering an appearance, as if they were making so many publick entries. But to judicious minds, and to men of experience in this life, the gilt chariot, the coach and six, the gaudy liveries, the supernumerary train of servants, the great house, the sumptuous table, the services of plate, the embroidered clothes, the rich brocades, and the profusion of jewels, that upon this occasion break out at once, are so many symptoms of madness in the happy pair, and prognostications of their future misery.

I remember a country neighbour of my lady Lizard's, Squire Wiseacre by name, who enjoyed a very clear estate of 500l. per annum, and by living frugally upon it, was before hand in the world. This gentleman unfortunately fell in love with Mrs. Fanny Flippant the then reigning toast in those parts. In a word, he married her, and to give a lasting proof of his affection, consented to make both her and himself miserable, by setting out in the high mode of wedlock. He, in less than the space of five years, was reduced to starve in prison for debt; and his lady, with a son and three daughters became a burden to the parish. The conduct of Frank Foresight was the very reverse to squire Wiseacre's. He had lived a bachelor some years about this town, in the best of companies; kept a chariot and four footmen, besides six saddle horses; he did not exceed, but went to the utmost stretch of his income; but when he married the beautiful Clarinda (who brought him a plentiful fortune) he dismissed two of his footmen, four of the saddle horses, and his chariot; and kept only a chair for the use of his lady. Embroidered clothes and laced linen were quite laid aside; he was married in a plain drugget, and from that time forward, in all the accommodations of life, never coveted any thing beyond cleanliness and conveniency. When any of his acquaintance asked him the reason of this sudden change; he would answer, 'In single life I could easily compute my wants, and provide against them; but the condition of life, I am now engaged in, is attended with a thousand unforeseen casualties, as well as a great many distant, but unavoidable expences. The happiness or misery, in this world, of a future progeny, will probably depend upon my good or ill husbandry. I shall never think I have discharged my duty, until I have laid up a provision for three or four children at least.' But pr'ythee, Frank, says a pert coxcomb that stood by, why shouldst thou reckon thy chickens before—upon which he cut him short, and replied, "It is no matter; a brave man can never want heirs, while there is one man of worth living." This precautions way of reasoning and acting, has proved to Mr. Foresight and his lady an uninterrupted source of felicity. Wedlock sits light and easy upon them; and they are at present happy in two sons and a daughter, who a great many years hence will feel the good effects of their parents prudence.

My memory fails me in recollecting where I have read, that in some parts of Holland it is provided by law, that every man, before he marries, shall be obliged to plant a certain number of trees, proportionable to his circumstances, as a pledge to the government for the maintenance of his children. Every honest as well as every every prudent man should do something equivalent to this, by retrenching all superfluous and idle expences, instead of following the extravagant practice of persons, who sacrifice every thing to their present vanity, and never are a day beforehand in thought. I know not what delight splendid nuptials may afford to the generality of the great world; I could never be present at any of them without a heavy heart. It is with pain I refrain from tears, when I see the bride thoughtlessly jigging it about the room, dishonoured with jewels, and dazzling the eyes of the whole assembly at the expence of her children's future subsistence. How singular, in the age we live in, is the moderate behaviour of young Sophia, and how amiable does she appear in the eyes of wise men! Her lover, a little before marriage, acquainted her, that he intended to lay out a thousand pounds for a present in jewels, but before he did it, desired to know what sort would be most acceptable to her. Sir, replied Sophia, I thank you for your kind and generous intentions, and only beg they may be executed in another manner: Be pleased only to give me the money, and I will try to lay it out to a better advantage. I am not, continues she, at all fond of those expensive trifles; neither do I think the wearing of diamonds can be any addition, nor the absence of them any diminution, to my happiness. I should be ashamed to appear in public for a few days in a dress which does not become me at all times. Besides, I see by that modest plain garb of yours, that you are not yourself affected with the gaiety of apparel. When I am your wife, my only care will be to keep my person clean and neat for you, and not to make it fine for others. The gentleman, transported with this excellent turn of mind in his mistress, presented her with the money in new gold. She purchased an annuity with it; out of the income of which, at every revolution of her wedding-day, she makes her husband some pretty present, as a token of her gratitude, and a fresh pledge of her love; part of it she yearly distributes among her indigent and best deserving neighbours; and the small remainder she lays out in something useful for herself, or the children.

N^o 148 Monday, August 31.

—— Fas est & ab hoste doceri.

Ovid. Met. l. 4. v. 428.

'Tis good to learn ev'n from an enemy.

Here is a kind of apophthegm, which I have frequently met with in my reading, to this purpose: "That there are few, if any books, out of which a man of learning may not extract something for his use." I have often experienced the truth of this maxim, when calling in at my bookseller's, I have taken the book next to my hand off the counter, to employ the minutes I have been obliged to linger away there, in waiting for one friend or other. Yesterday when I came there, the Turkish Tales happened to lie in my way; upon opening of that amusing author, I happened to dip upon a short tale, which gave me a great many serious reflections. The very same fable may fall into the hands of a great many men of wit and pleasure, who, it is probable, will read it with their usual levity; but since it may as probably divert and instruct a great many persons of plain and virtuous minds, I shall make no scruple of making it the entertainment of this day's paper. The moral to be drawn from it is intirely Christian, and is so very obvious, that I shall leave to every reader the pleasure of picking it out for himself. I shall only premise, to obviate any offence that may be taken, that a great many notions in the Mahometan religion are borrowed from the Holy Scriptures.

The History of Santon Barfisa.

Here was formerly a Santon whose name was Barfisa, which for the space of an hundred years very fervently applied himself to prayers; and scarce ever

ever went out of the grotto in which he made his residence, for fear of exposing himself to the danger of offending God. He fasted in the day time, and watched in the night. All the inhabitants of the country had such a great veneration for him, and so highly valued his prayers, that they commonly applied to him, when they had any favour to beg of heaven. When he made vows for the health of a sick person, the patient was immediately cured.

It happened that the daughter of the king of that country fell into a dangerous distemper, the cause of which the physicians could not discover, yet they continued prescribing remedies by guess; but instead of helping the princess, they only augmented her disease. In the mean time the king was inconsolable, for he passionately loved his daughter; wherefore one day, finding all human assistance vain, he declared it as his opinion that the princess ought to be sent to the Santon Barsisa.

All the Beys applauded his sentiment, and the king's officers conducted her to the Santon; who notwithstanding his frozen age, could not see such a beauty without being sensibly moved. He gazed on her with pleasure; and the devil taking this opportunity, whispered in his ear thus; "O Santon! don't let slip such a fortunate minute: Tell the king's servants that it is requisite for the princess to pass this night in the grotto, to see whether it will please God to cure her; that you will put up a prayer for her, and that they need only come to fetch her to morrow."

How weak is man! The Santon followed the devil's advice, and did what he suggested to him. But the officers before they would yield to leave the princess, sent one of their number to know the king's pleasure. That monarch, who had an intire confidence in Barsisa, never in the least scrupled the trusting of his daughter with him. "I consent," said he, "that she stay with that holy man, and that he keep her as long as he pleases: I am wholly satisfied on that head."

When the officers had received the king's answer, they all retired, and the princess remained alone with the hermit. Night being come, the devil presented himself to the Santon, saying, "Canst thou let slip so fa“vourable an opportunity with so charming a creature?

“Fear not her telling of the violence you offer her; if “she were even so indiscreet as to reveal it, who will “believe her? The court, the city, and all the world “are too much prepossessed in your favour, to give any “credit to such a report. You may do any thing unpunished, when armed by the great reputation for “wisdom, which you have acquired.” The unfortunate Barfisa was so weak as to hearken to the enemy of mankind. He approached the princess, took her into his arms, and in a moment cancelled a virtue of an hundred years duration.

He had no sooner perpetrated his crime, than a thousand avenging horrors haunted him night and day. He thus accosts the devil: “Oh wretch,” says he, “it is “thou which hast destroyed me! Thou hast encompassed “me for a whole age, and endeavoured to seduce me;
“and now at last thou hast gained thy end.” “Oh Santon!” answered the devil, “do not reproach me with “the pleasure thou hast enjoyed. Thou mayest repent:
“But what is unhappy for thee is, that the princess is “impregnated, and thy sin will become publick: Thou “wilt become the laughing-stock of those who admire
“and reverence thee at present, and the king will put “thee to an ignominious death.

Barfisa terrified by this discourse, says to the devil,
“What shall I do to prevent the publication of my “shame?” “To hinder the knowledge of your crime,
“you ought to commit a fresh one,” answered the devil:
“Kill the princess, bury her at the corner of the grotto,
“and when the king’s messengers come to morrow, tell “them you have cured her, and that she went from the “grotto very early in the morning: They will believe “you, and search for her all over the city and country;
“and the king her father will be in great pain for her,
“but after several vain searches it will wear off.”

The hermit abandoned by God, pursuant to this advice, killed the princess, buried her in a corner of the grotto, and the next day told the officers what the devil bid him say. They made diligent inquiry for the king’s daughter, but not being able to hear of her,

her, they despaired of finding her, when the devil told them that all their search for the princess was vain; and relating what had passed betwixt her and the Santon, he told them the place where she was interred. The officers immediately went to the grotto, seized Barfisa, and found the princess's body in the place to which the devil had directed them; whereupon they took up the corps and carried that and the Santon to the palace.

When the king saw his daughter dead, and was informed of the whole event, he broke out into tears and bitter lamentations; and assembling the doctors, he laid the Santon's crime before them, and asked their advice how he should be punished. All the doctors condemned him to death, upon which the king ordered him to be hanged: Accordingly, a gibbet was erected: the hermit went up the ladder, and when he was going to be turned off, the devil whispered in his ear these words: "O Santon! if you will worship me I will extricate you out of this difficulty, and transport you two thousand leagues from hence, into a country where you shall be revered by men, as much as you were before this adventure." "I am content," says Barfisa; "deliver me, and I will worship thee." "Give me first a sign of adoration," replies the devil. Whereupon the Santon bowed his head, and said, "I give myself to you." The devil then raising his voice, said, "O Barfisa, I am satisfied; I have obtained what I desired:" And with these words, spitting in his face, he disappeared; and the deluded Santon was hanged.

N^o 149 Tuesday, September 1.

—Uratur vestis amore tuæ.

OVID.

Your very dress shall captivate his heart.

I Have in a former PRECAUTION, endeavoured to shew the mechanism of an epic poem, and given the reader prescriptions whereby he may, without the scarce ingredient of a genius, compose the several parts of that great work. I shall now treat of an affair of more general importance, and make dress the subject of the following paper.

Dress is grown of universal use in the conduct of life. Civilities and respect are only paid to appearance. It is a varnish that gives a lustre to every action, “a passe par tout” that introduces us into all polite assemblies, and the only certain method of making most of the youth of our nation conspicuous.

There was formerly an absurd notion among the men of letters, that to establish themselves in the character of wits, it was absolutely necessary to shew a contempt of dress. This injudicious affectation of theirs flattened all their conversation, took off the force of every expression, and incapacitated a female audience from giving attention to any thing they said. While the man of dress catches their eyes as well as ears, and at every ludicrous turn obtains a laugh of applause by way of compliment.

I shall lay down as an established maxim, which hath been received in all ages, that no person can dress without a genius.

A genius is never to be acquired by art, but is the gift of nature; it may be discovered even in infancy. Little master will smile when you shake his plume of feathers before him, and thrust its little knuckles in papa's full-bottom; miss will toy with her mother's Mechlin lace, and gaze on the gaudy colours of a fan; she she smacks her lips for a kiss at the appearance of a gentleman in embroidery, and is frightened at the indecency of the house-maid's blue apron: as she grows up, the dress of her baby begins to be her care, and you will see a genteel fancy open itself in the ornaments of the little machine.

We have a kind of sketch of dress, if I may so call it, among us, which, as the invention was foreign, is called a Dishabille: every thing is thrown on with a loose and careless air; yet a genius discovers itself even thro' this negligence of dress, just as you may see the masterly hand of a painter in three or four swift strokes of the pencil.

The most fruitful in genius's is the French nation; we owe most of our janty fashions, now in vogue, to some adept beau among them. Their ladies exert the whole scope of their fancies upon every new petticoat; every head-dress undergoes a change; and not a lady of genius will appear in the same shape two days together; so that we may impute the scarcity of genius's in our climate to the stagnation of fashions.

The ladies among us have a superior genius to the men; which have for some years past shot out in several exorbitant inventions for the greater consumption of our manufacture. While the men have contented themselves with the retrenchment of the hat, or the various scallop of the pocket, the ladies have sunk the head-dress, inclosed themselves in the circumference of the hoop-petticoat; furbelows and flounces have been disposed of at will, the stays have been lowered behind, for the better displaying the beauties of the neck; not to mention the various rolling of the sleeve, and those other nice circumstances of dress upon which every lady employs her fancy at pleasure.

The sciences of poetry and dress have so near an alliance to each other, that the rules of the one, with very little variation, may serve for the other.

As in a poem all the several parts of it must have a harmony with the whole: so, to keep to the propriety of dress, the coat, waistcoat and breeches must be of the same piece.

As Aristotle obliges all dramattick writers to a strict observance of time, place, and action, in order to compose a just work of this kind of poetry; so it is absolutely necessary for a person that applies himself to the study of dress, to have a strict regard to these three particulars.

To begin with the time. What is more absurd than the velvet gown in summer? and what is more agreeable in the winter? the muff and fur are preposterous in June, which are charmingly supplied by the Turkey handkerchief and the fan. Every thing must be suitable to the season, and there can be no propriety in dress without a strict regard to time.

You must have no less respect to place. What gives a lady a more easy air than the wrapping gown in the morning at the tea-table? The Bath countenances the men of dress in showing themselves at the pump in their Indian night-gowns, without the least indecorum.

Action is what gives the spirit both to writing and dress. Nothing appears graceful without action; the head, the arms, the legs, must all conspire to give a habit a genteel air. What distinguishes the air of the court from that of the country but action? A lady, by the careless toss of her head, will shew a set of ribbons to advantage; by a pinch of snuff judiciously taken will display the glittering ornament of her little finger; by the new modelling her tucker, at one view present you with a fine turned hand, and a rising bosom. In order to be a proficient in action, I cannot sufficiently recommend the science of Dancing: this will give the feet an easy gait, and the arms a gracefulness of motion. If a person have not a strict regard to these three above-mentioned rules of antiquity, the richest dress will appear stiff and affected, and the most gay habit fantastical and taudry.

As different sorts of poetry require a different stile: the Elegy, tender and mournful; the Ode, gay and sprightly; the Epic, sublime, &c. so must the widow confess her grief in the veil; the bride frequently makes her joy and exultation conspicuous in the silver brocade; and the plume and the scarlet dye is requisite to give the foldier a martial air. There is another kind of occasional dress in use among the ladies; I mean the riding habit, which some have not injudiciously stiled the Hermaphroditical, by reason of its masculine and feminine composition; but I shall rather choose to call it the Pindaric, as its first institution was at a New-Market horse-race, and as it is a mixture of the sublimity of the epic with the easy softness of the ode.
the

There sometimes arises a great genius in dress, who cannot content himself with merely copying from others, but will, as he sees occasion, strike out into the long pocket, flash'd sleeve, or something particular in the disposition of his lace, or the flourish of his embroidery. Such a person, like the masters of other sciences, will show that he hath a manner of his own.

On the contrary, there are some pretenders to dress who shine out but by halves; whether it be for want of genius or money. A dancing-master of the lowest rank seldom fails of the scarlet stocking and the red heel; and shows a particular respect to the Leg and Foot, to which he owes his subsistence: when at the same time perhaps all the superior ornament of his body is neglected. We may say of these sort of dressers what Horace says of his patch-work poets,

Purpureus latè qui splendeat unus & alter Assuitur pannus—

Ars Poet. v. 15.

—————A few florid lines

Shine thro' th' insipid dulness of the rest.

ROSCOMMON.

Others who lay the stress of beauty in their face, exert all their extravagance in the periwig, which is a kind of index of the mind; the full-bottom formally combed all before, denotes the lawyer and the politician; the smart tye-wig with the black ribbon shows a man of fierceness of temper; and he that burdens himself with a superfluity of white hair which flows down the back, and mantles in waving curls over the shoulders, is generally observed to be less curious in the furniture of the inward recesses of the skull, and lays himself open to the application of that censure which Milton applies to the fair sex.

— of outward form

Elaborate, of inward less exact.

A lady of genius will give a genteel air to her whole dress by a well-fancied suit of knots, as a judicious writer gives a spirit to a whole sentence by a single expression. As words grow old, and new ones enrich the language, so there is a constant succession of dresses; the fringe succeeds the lace, the stays shorten or extend the waste, the ribbon undergoes divers variations, the head-dress receives frequent rises and falls every year; and in short, the whole woman throughout, as curious observers of dress have remarked, is changed from top to toe in the period of five years. A poet will now and then, to serve his purpose, coin a word, so will a lady of genius venture at an innovation in the fashion; but as Horace advises, that all new-minted words should have a Greek derivation to give them an indisputable authority, so I would counsel all our improvers of fashion always to take the hint from France, which may as properly be called the “fountain of dress,” as Greece was of literature.

Dress may bear a parallel to poetry with respect to moving the passions. The greatest motive to Love, as daily experience shows us, is Dress. I have known a lady at sight fly to a red feather, and readily give her hand to a fringed pair of gloves. At another time I have seen the awkward appearance of her rural humble servant move her indignation; she is jealous every time her rival hath a new suit; and in a rage when her woman pins her mantua to disadvantage. Unhappy, unguarded woman! alas! what moving rhetorick has she often found in the seducing full-bottom? Who can tell the resistless eloquence of the embroidered coat, the gold snuff box, and the amber-headed cane?

I shall conclude these criticisms with some general remarks upon the Millener, the Mantua-maker, and the Lady's Woman, these being the three chief on which all the circumstances of dress depend.

The Millener must be thoroughly versed in physiognomy; in the choice of ribbons she must have a particular regard to the complexion, and must ever be mindful to cut the head-dress to the dimensions of the face.

When

When she meets with a countenance of large diameter, she must draw the dress forward to the face, and let the lace incroach a little upon the cheek, which casts an agreeable shade, and takes off from its masculine figure: the little oval face requires the diminutive commode, just on the tip of the crown of the head: she must have a regard to the several ages of women; the head-dress must give the mother a more sedate mien than the virgin; and age must not be made ridiculous with the flaunting airs of youth. There is a beauty that is peculiar to the several stages of life, and as much propriety must be observed in the dress of the old, as the young.

The Mantua-maker must be an expert anatomist; and must, if judiciously chosen, have a name of French termination; she must know how to hide all the defects in the proportions of the body, and must be able to mold the shape by the stays, so as to preserve the intestines, that while she corrects the body, she may not interfere with the pleasures of the palate.

The Lady's Woman must have all the qualities of a critick in poetry; as her dress, like the critick's learning, is at second hand, she must, like him, have a ready talent at Censure, and her tongue must be deeply versed in detraction; she must be sure to asperse the characters of the ladies of most eminent virtue and beauty, to indulge her lady's spleen: and as it hath been remarked, that criticks are the most fawning sycophants to their patrons, so must our female critick be a thorough proficient in flattery: she must add sprightliness to her lady's air, by encouraging her vanity; give gracefulness to her step, by cherishing her pride; and make her show a haughty contempt of her admirers, by enumerating her imaginary conquests. As a critick must stock his memory with the names of all the authors of note, she must be no less ready in the recital of all the beaux and pretty fellows in vogue; like the male critick, she asserts, that the theory of any science is above the practice, and that it is not necessary to be able to set her own person off to advantage, in order to be a judge of the dress of others; and besides all those qualifications, she must be endued with the gift of secrecy, a talent very rarely to be met with in her profession.

By

By what I have said, I believe my reader will be convinced, that notwithstanding the many pretenders, the perfection of dress cannot be attained without a genius; and shall venture boldly to affirm, that in all arts and sciences whatever, Epic poetry excepted, (of which I formerly showed the Knack or Mechanism,) a genius is absolutely necessary.

N^o 150 Wednesday, September 2.

— *Nescio quâ dulcedine læti,
Progeniem nidosque fovent*—

Virg. Georg. 4. v. 55.

————— with secret joy,
Their young succession all their cares employ.

DRYDEN.

I Went the other day to visit Eliza, who in the perfect bloom of beauty, is the mother of several children. She had a little prating girl upon her lap, who was begging to be very fine, that she might go abroad; and the indulgent mother, at her little daughter's request, had just taken the knots off her own head, to adorn the hair of the pretty trisler. A smiling boy was at the same time caressing a lap-dog, which is their mother's favourite, because it pleases the children; and she, with a delight in her looks which heightened her beauty, so divided her conversation with the two pretty prattlers, as to make them both equally chearful.

As I came in, she said with a blush, "Mr. IRON-
"SIDE, though you are an old bachelor, you must not "laugh at my tenderness to my children." I need not tell my reader, what civil things I said in answer to the lady, whose matron like behaviour gave me infinite satisfaction: since I myself take great pleasure in playing with children, and am seldom unprovided of plumbs or marbles, to make my court to such entertaining companions.
or

Whence is it, said I to myself when I was alone, that the affection of parents is so intense to their off-spring? Is it because they generally find such resemblances in what they have produced, as that thereby they think themselves renewed in their children, and are willing to transmit themselves to future times? or is it, because they think themselves obliged, by the dictates of humanity, to nourish and rear what is placed so immediately under their protection; and what by their means is brought into this world, the scene of misery, of necessity? These will not come up to it. Is it not rather the good providence of that Being, who in a supereminent degree protects and cherishes the whole race of mankind, his sons and creatures? How shall we, any other way, account for this natural affection, so signally displayed throughout every species of the animal creation, without which the course of nature would quickly fail, and every various kind be extinct? Instances of tenderness in the most savage brutes are so frequent, that quotations of that kind are altogether unnecessary.

If we, who have no particular concern in them, take a secret delight in observing the gentle dawn of reason in babes; if our ears are soothed with their half forming and aiming at articulate sounds: if we are charmed with their pretty mimickry, and surprised at the unexpected starts of wit and cunning in these miniatures of man: what transport may we imagine in the breasts of those, into whom natural instinct hath poured tenderness and fondness for them! how amiable is such a weakness in human nature! or rather, how great a weakness is it, to give humanity so reproachful a name! The bare consideration of paternal affection should methinks create a more grateful tenderness in children toward their parents, than we generally see; and the silent whispers of nature be attended to, though the laws of God and man did not call aloud.

These silent whispers of nature have had a marvellous power, even when their cause hath been unknown. There are several examples in story of tender friend-friendships formed betwixt men, who knew not of their near relation. Such accounts confirm me in an opinion I have long entertained, that there is a sympathy betwixt souls, which cannot be explained by the prejudice of education, the sense of duty, or any other human motive.

The memoirs of a certain French nobleman, which now lie before me, furnish me with a very entertaining instance of this secret attraction, implanted by providence in the human soul. It will be necessary to inform the reader, that the person whose story I am going to relate, was one whose roving and romantick temper, joined to a disposition singularly amorous, had led him through a vast variety of galantries and amours. He had, in his youth, attended a princess of France into Poland, where he had been entertained by the king her husband, and married the daughter of a grandee. Upon her death he returned into his native country; where his intrigues and other misfortunes having consumed his paternal estate, he now went to take care of the fortune his deceased wife had left him in Poland. In his journey he was robbed before he reached Warsaw, and lay ill of a fever, when he met with the following adventure; which he shall relate in his own words.

‘ I had been in this condition for four days, when ‘ the countess of Venoski passed that way. She was in‘ formed that a stranger of good fashion lay sick, and ‘ her charity led her to see me. I remembered her, for ‘ I had often seen her with my wife, to whom she was ‘ nearly related; but when I found she knew me not, I ‘ thought fit to conceal my name. I told her I was a ‘ German; that I had been robbed; and that if she had ‘ the charity to send me to Warsaw, the queen would ‘ acknowledge it; I having the honour to be known to ‘ her majesty. The countess had the goodness to take ‘ compassion of me; and ordering me to be put in a ‘ litter, carried me to Warsaw, where I was lodged in ‘ her house until my health should allow me to wait on ‘ the queen.

‘ My fever increased after my journey was over,
 ‘ and I was confined to my bed for fifteen days. When
 ‘ the

‘ the countess first saw me, she had a young lady with ‘ her about eighteen years of age, who was much taller
 ‘ and better shaped than the Polish women generally ‘ are. She was very fair, her skin exceeding fine, and ‘ her air and shape inexpressibly beautiful. I was not ‘ so sick as to overlook this young beauty; and I felt
 ‘ in my heart such emotions at the first view, as made ‘ me fear that all my misfortunes had not armed me ‘ sufficiently against the charms of the fair sex. The ‘ amiable creature seemed afflicted at my sickness; and ‘ she appeared to have so much concern and care for ‘ me, as raised in me a great inclination and tenderness
 ‘ for her. She came every day into my chamber to ‘ inquire after my health; I asked who she was, and ‘ I was answered, that she was neice to the countess of ‘ Venoski.

‘ I verily believe that the constant sight of this ‘ charming maid, and the pleasure I received from her ‘ careful attendance, contributed more to my recovery
 ‘ than all the medicines the physicians gave me. In ‘ short, my fever left me, and I had the satisfaction to ‘ see the lovely creature overjoyed at my recovery.
 ‘ She came to see me oftner as I grew better; and I al‘ ready felt a stronger and more tender affection for her
 ‘ than I ever bore to any woman in my life: when I ‘ began to perceive that her constant care of me was ‘ only a blind, to give her an opportunity of seeing a ‘ young Pole whom I took to be her lover. He seemed ‘ to be much about her age, of a brown complexion,
 ‘ very tall, but finely shaped. Every time she came ‘ to see me the young gentleman came to find her out;
 ‘ and they usually retired to a corner of the chamber,
 ‘ where they seemed to converse with great earnest‘ ness. The aspect of the youth pleased me wonder‘ fully; and if I had not suspected that he was my ri‘ val, I should have taken delight in his person and ‘ friendship.

‘ They both of them often asked me if I were
 ‘ in reality a German; which when I continued to af‘ firm, they seemed very much troubled. One day I ‘ took notice that the young lady and gentleman, ‘ having retired to a window, were very intent upon a ‘ picture;

‘ picture; and that every now and then they cast their ‘ eyes upon me, as if they had found some resemblance ‘ betwixt that and my features. I could not forbear to ‘ ask the meaning of it; upon which the lady answer‘ ed, that if I had been a Frenchman, she should have ‘ imagined that I was the person for whom the picture ‘ was drawn, because it so exactly resembled me. I de‘ sired to see it. But how great was my surprise! when ‘ I found it to be the very painting, which I had sent ‘ to the queen, five years before, and which she com‘ manded me to get drawn to be given to my children.
‘ After I had viewed the piece, I cast my eyes upon the ‘ young lady, and then upon the gentleman I had ‘ thought to be her lover. My heart beat, and I felt ‘ a secret emotion which filled me with wonder. I ‘ thought I traced in the two young persons some of my ‘ own features, and at that moment I said to myself, ‘ “Are not these my children?” The tears came into my ‘ eyes, and I was about to run and embrace him; but ‘ constraining myself with pain, I asked whose picture
‘ it was? The maid, perceiving that I could not speak ‘ without tears, fell a weeping. Her tears absolutely ‘ confirmed me in my opinion, and falling upon her ‘ neck, “Ah my dear child,” said I, “yes, I am your ‘ father.” I could say no more. The youth seized my ‘ hands at the same time, and kissing, bathed them with ‘ his tears. Throughout my life, I never felt a joy ‘ equal to this; and it must be owned, that nature in‘ spires more lively motions and pleasing tenderness
‘ than the passions can possibly excite.

Thursday,

N^o 151 Thursday, September 3.

*Accipiat sanè mercedem sanguinis, & sic
Palleat, ut nādis pressit qui calcibus anguem.*

Juv. Sat. I. v. 42.

A dear-bought bargain, all things duly weigh'd,
For which their thrice-concocted blood is paid;
With looks as wan, as he, who, in the brake,
At unawares has trod upon a snake. DRYDEN.

To the GUARDIAN.

Old NESTOR,

‘ I Believe you distance me not so much in years as ‘ in wisdom, and therefore since you have gained
‘ so deserved a reputation, I beg your assistance in cor‘ recting the manners of an untoward lad, who perhaps ‘ may listen to your admonitions, sooner than to all the ‘ severe checks, and grave reproofs of a father. With‘ out any longer preamble, you must know, Sir, that ‘ about two years ago, Jack my eldest son and heir
‘ was sent up to London, to be admitted of the Tem‘ ple not so much with a view of his studying the law,
‘ as a desire to improve his breeding. This was done
‘ out of complaisance to a cousin of his, an airy lady, ‘ who was continually teizing me, that the boy would ‘ shoot up into a mere country booby, if he did not ‘ see a little of the world. She herself was bred chiefly
‘ in town, and since she was married into the country,
‘ neither looks, nor talks, nor dresses like any of her ‘ neighbours, and is grown the admiration of every ‘ one but her husband. The latter end of last month
‘ some important business called me up to town, and ‘ the first thing I did, the next morning about ten,
‘ was to pay a visit to my son at his chambers; but as I ‘ began to knock at the door, I was interrupted by the ‘ bed-maker in the stair-case, who told me her master ‘ seldom

‘ seldom rose till about twelve, and about one I might ‘ be sure to find him drinking tea. I bid her some‘ what hastily hold her prating, and open the door,
‘ which accordingly she did. The first thing I observ‘ ed upon the table was the secret amours of ———
‘ and by it stood a box of pills; on a chair lay a snuff-‘ box with a fan half broke, and on the floor a pair of ‘ foils. Having seen this furniture I entered his bed‘ chamber, not without some noise; whereupon he be‘ gan to swear at his bed-maker (as he thought) for ‘ disturbing him so soon, and was turning about for the ‘ other nap, when he discovered such a thin, pale, sick‘ ly visage, that had I not heard his voice, I should ne‘ ver have guessed him to have been my son. How dif‘ ferent was this countenance from that ruddy, hale ‘ complexion, which he had at parting with me from ‘ home! After I had waked him, he gave me to under‘ stand, that he was but lately recovered out of a violent ‘ fever, and the reason why he did not acquaint me
‘ with it, was, lest the melancholy news might occa‘ sion too many tears among his relations, and be an ‘ unsupportable grief to his mother. To be short with ‘ you, old NESTOR, I hurried my young spark down ‘ into the country along with me, and there am endea‘ vouring to plump him up, so as to be no disgrace to ‘ his pedigree; for I assure you it was never known in ‘ the memory of man, that any one of the family of the ‘ Ringwoods ever fell into a consumption, except Mrs.
‘ Dorothy Ringwood, who died a maid at 45. In order
‘ to bring him to himself, and to be one of us again, I ‘ make him go to bed at ten, and rise half an hour past ‘ five; and when he is puling for bohea tea and cream,
‘ I place upon a table a jolly piece of cold roast beef,
‘ or well-powdered ham, and bid him eat and live; then ‘ take him into the fields to observe the reapers, how ‘ the harvest goes forwards. There is no body pleased ‘ with his present constitution but his gay cousin, who ‘ spirits him up, and tells him, he looks fair, and is grown
‘ well-shaped; but the honest tenants shake their heads
‘ and cry, lack-a-day, how thin is poor young master ‘ fallen! The other day, when I told him of it, he had ‘ the impudence to reply, I hope, Sir, you would not ‘ have

‘ have me as fat as Mr. — Alas! what would then be‘ come of me? how would the ladies pish at such a ‘ great monstrous thing?—If you are truly, what your ‘ title imports, a GUARDIAN, pray, Sir, be pleased to ‘ consider what a noble generation must in all probabi‘ lity ensue from the lives which the town-bred gentle‘ men too often lead. A friend of mine not long ago,
 ‘ as we were complaining of the times, repeated two ‘ stanzas out of my lord Roscommon, which I think may ‘ here be applicable.

‘Twas not the spawn of such as these,
 That dy’d with Punick blood the conquer’d seas,
 And quash’d the stern Æacides:
 Made the proud Asian monarch feel,
 How weak his gold was against Europe’s steel;
 Forc’d e’en dire Hannibal to yield;
 And won the long-disputed world at Zama’s fatal field,
 But soldiers of a rustick mould,
 Rough, hardy, season’d, manly, bold.

Either they dug the stubborn ground,
 Or thro’ hewn woods their weighty strokes did found:
 And after the declining sun
 Had chang’d the shadows, and their task was done;
 Home with their weary team, they took their way,
 And drown’d in friendly bowls the labours of the day.

I am, SIR,

Your very humble servant,

JONATHAN RINGWOOD.

P. S. ‘ I forgot to tell you, that while I waited in ‘ my son’s anti-chamber, I found upon the table the ‘ following bill.

	l.	s.	d.
‘ Sold to Mr. Jonathan Ringwood, a
‘ plain muslin head and ruffles, with col-	1	18	6
‘ bertine lace.
‘ Six pair of white kid gloves for ma-	0	14	0
‘ dam Salley.
‘ Three handkerchiefs for madam Salley.	0	15	0
‘ In his chamber-window I saw his shoe-‘ maker’s bill, with this remarkable article,
‘ For Mr. Ringwood three pair of laced shoes.	3	00	0

‘ And in the drawer of the table was the following ‘ billet.

Mr. RINGWOOD,

‘ I desire, that because you are such a country booby,
‘ that you forget the use and care of your snuff-box,
‘ you would not call me thief. Pray see my face no ‘ more.

Your abused friend,

SARAH GALLOPP.

‘ Under these words my hopeful heir had writ, “Me“ morandum, to send her word I have found my box, “ though I know she has it.”

N^o 152 Friday, September 4.

*Quin potius pacem æternam pactosque hymenæos
Exercemus—* Virg. Æn. 4. v. 99.

Rather in leagues of endless peace unite,
And celebrate the hymeneal rite.

There is no rule in Longinus which I more admire than that wherein he advises an author who would attain to the sublime, and writes for eternity, to consider, when he is engaged in his composition, what Homer or Plato, or any other of those heroes, in the learned world, would have said or thought upon the same occasion. I have often practised this rule, with regard to the best authors among the ancients, as well as among the moderns. With what success, I must leave to the judgment of others. I may at least venture to say with Mr. Dryden, where he professes to have imitated Shakespear's stile, that in imitating such great authors I have always excelled myself.

I have also by this means revived several antiquated ways of writing, which though very instructive and entertaining, had been laid aside, and forgotten for some

some ages. I shall in this place only mention those allegories wherein virtues, vices and human passions are introduced as real actors. Though this kind of composition was practised by the finest authors among the ancients, our countryman Spenser is the last writer of note who has applied himself to it with success.

That an allegory may be both delightful and instructive; in the first place, the fable of it ought to be perfect, and if possible to be filled with surprising turns and incidents. In the next, there ought to be useful morals and reflections couched under it, which still receive a greater value from their being new and uncommon; as also from their appearing difficult to have been thrown into emblematical types and shadows.

I was once thinking to have written a whole canto in the spirit of Spenser, and in order to it contrived a fable of imaginary persons and characters. I raised it on that common dispute between the comparative perfections and preeminence of the two sexes, each of which have very frequently had their advocates among the men of letters. Since I have not time to accomplish this work, I shall present my reader with the naked fable, reserving the embellishments of verse and poetry to another opportunity.

The two sexes contending for superiority, were once at war with each other, which was chiefly carried on by their auxiliaries. The males were drawn up on the one side of a very spacious plain, the females on the other; between them was left a very large interval for their auxiliaries to engage in. At each extremity of this middle space lay encamped several bodies of neutral forces, who waited for the event of the battle before they would declare themselves, that they might then act as they saw occasion.

The main body of the male auxiliaries was commanded by Fortitude; that of the female by Beauty. Fortitude began the onset on Beauty, but found to his cost, that she had such a particular witchcraft in her looks, as withered all his strength. She played upon him so many smiles and glances, that she quite weakened and disarmed him.

In short he was ready to call for quarter, had not Wisdom come to his aid: this was the commander of the male right wing, and would have turned the fate of the day, had not he been timely opposed by Cunning, who commanded the left wing of the female auxiliaries. Cunning was the chief engineer of the fair army; but upon this occasion was posted, as I have here said, to receive the attacks of Wisdom. It was very entertaining to see the workings of these two antagonists; the conduct of the one, and the stratagems of the other. Never was there a more equal match. Those who beheld it gave the victory sometimes to the one, and sometimes to the other, though most declared the advantage was on the side of the female commander.

In the mean time the conflict was very great in the left wing of the army, where the battle began to turn to the male side. This wing was commanded by an old experienced officer called Patience, and on the female side by a general known by the name of Scorn. The latter, that fought after the manner of the Parthians, had the better of it all the beginning of the day; but being quite tired out with the long pursuits, and repeated attacks of the enemy, who had been repulsed above a hundred times, and rallied as often, began to think of yielding. When on a sudden a body of neutral forces began to move. The leader was of an ugly look, and gigantick stature. He acted like a drawcanfir, sparing neither friend nor foe. His name was Lust. On the female side he was opposed by a select body of forces, commanded by a young officer that had the face of a Cherubim, and the name of Modesty. This beautiful young hero was supported by one of a more masculine turn, and fierce behaviour, called by Men Honour, and by the Gods Pride. This last made an obstinate defence, and drove back the enemy more than once, but at length resigned at discretion.

The dreadful monster after having overturned whole squadrons in the female army, fell in among the males, where he made a more terrible havock than on the other side. He was here opposed by Reason, who drew up all his forces against him, and held the fight in suspense for some time, but at length quitted the field.

After

After a great ravage on both sides, the two armies agreed to join against this common foe. And in order to it drew out a small chosen band, whom they placed by consent under the conduct of Virtue, who in a little time drove this foul ugly monster out of the field.

Upon his retreat, a second neutral leader, whose name was Love, marched in between the two armies. He headed a body of ten thousand winged boys that threw their darts and arrows promiscuously among both armies. The wounds they gave were not the wounds of an enemy. They were pleasing to those that felt them; and had so strange an effect, that they wrought a spirit of mutual friendship, reconciliation, and goodwill in both sexes. The two armies now looked with cordial love on each other, and stretched out their arms with tears of joy, as longing to forget old animosities, and embrace one another.

The last general of neutrals that appeared in the field, was Hymen, who marched immediately after Love, and seconding the good inclinations which he had inspired, joined the hands of both armies. Love generally accompanied him, and recommended the sexes pair by pair to his good offices.

But as it is usual enough for several persons to dress themselves in the habit of a great leader, Ambition and Avarice had taken on them the garb and habit of Love, by which means they often imposed on Hymen, by putting into his hands several couples whom he would never have joined together, had it not been brought about by the delusion of these two impostors.

N^o 153 Saturday, September 5.

Admiranda tibi levium spectacula rerum.

Virg. Georg. 4. v. 3.

A mighty pomp, tho' made of little things.

DRYDEN.

THere is no passion which steals into the heart more imperceptibly, and covers itself under more disguises, than Pride. For my own part, I think if there is any passion or vice which I am wholly a stranger to, it is this; though at the same time, perhaps this very judgment which I form of myself, proceeds in some measure from this corrupt principle.

I have been always wonderfully delighted with that sentence in holy writ, "Pride was not made for man." There is not indeed any single view of human nature under its present condition, which is not sufficient to extinguish in us all the secret seeds of pride; and, on the contrary, to sink the soul into the lowest state of humility, and what the school-men call self-annihilation. Pride was not made for man, as he is,

1. A sinful,
2. An ignorant,
3. A miserable being.

There is nothing in his understanding, in his will, or in his present condition, that can tempt any considerate creature to pride or vanity.

These three very reasons why he should not be proud, are notwithstanding the reasons why he is so. Were not he a sinful creature, he would not be subject to a passion which rises from the depravity of his nature; were he not an ignorant creature, he would see that he has nothing to be proud of; and were not the whole species miserable, he would not have those wretched objects of comparison before his eyes, which are the occasions of his passion, and which make one man value himself more than another.

A wise man will be contented that his glory be deferred until such time as he shall be truly glorified; when his understanding shall be cleared, his will rectified, and his happiness assured; or in other words, when he shall be neither sinful, nor ignorant, nor miserable.

If there be any thing which makes human nature appear ridiculous to Beings of superior faculties, it must be pride. They know so well the vanity of those imaginary perfections that swell the heart of man, and of those little supernumerary advantages, whether in birth, fortune, or title, which one man enjoys above another, that it must certainly very much astonish, if it does not very much divert them, when they see a mortal puffed up, and valuing himself above his neighbours on any of these accounts, at the same time that he is obnoxious to all the common calamities of the species.

To set this thought in its true light, we will fancy, if you please, that yonder mole-hill is inhabited by reasonable creatures, and that every pismire (his shape and way of life only excepted) is endowed with human passions. How should we smile to hear one give us an account of the pedigrees, distinctions, and titles that reign among them? Observe how the whole swarm divide and make way for the pismire that passes through them! you must understand he is an emmet of quality, and has better blood in his veins than any pismire in the mole-hill. Do not you see how sensible he is of it, how slow he marches forward, how the whole rabble of ants keep their distance? Here you may observe one placed upon a little eminence, and looking down on a long row of labourers. He is the richest insect on this side the hillock, he has a walk of half a yard in length and a quarter of an inch in breadth, he keeps an hundred menial servants, and has at least fifteen barley-corns in his granary. He is now chiding and beslaving the emmet that stands before him, and who, for all that we can discover, is as good an emmet as himself.

But here comes an insect of figure! Do not you take notice of a little white straw that he carries in his mouth? That straw, you must understand, he would not part with for the longest tract about the mole-hill: did you but know what he has undergone to purchase it! See how the ants of all qualities and conditions swarm about him. Should this straw drop out of his mouth, you would see all this numerous circle of attendants follow the next that took it up, and leave the discarded insect, or run over his back, to come at his successor.

If now you have a mind to see all the ladies of the mole-hill, observe first the pismire that listens to the emmet on her left hand, at the same time that she seems to turn away her head from him. He tells this poor insect that she is a goddess, that her eyes are brighter than the sun, that life and death are at her disposal. She believes him, and gives herself a thousand little airs upon it. Mark the vanity of the pismire on your left hand. She can scarce crawl with age; but you must know she values herself upon her birth; and if you mind, spurns at every one that comes within her reach. The little nimble coquette that is running along by the side of her, is a wit. She has broke many a pismire's heart. Do but observe what a drove of lovers are running after her.

We will here finish this imaginary scene; but first of all, to draw the parallel closer, will suppose, if you please, that death comes down upon the mole-hill, in the shape of a cock-sparrow, who picks up, without distinction, the pismire of quality and his flatterers, the pismire of substance and day-labourers, the white-straw officer and his sycophants, with all the goddesses, wits, and beauties of the mole-hill.

May we not imagine that beings of superior natures and perfections regard all the instances of pride and vanity, among our own species, in the same kind of view, when they take a survey of those who inhabit the earth: or, in the language of an ingenious French poet; of those pismires that people this heap of dirt, which human vanity has divided into climates and regions.

N^o 154

Monday, September 7.

Omnia transformat sese in miracula rerum.

Virg. Georg. 4. v. 441.

All shapes, the most prodigious, they assume.

I Question not but the following letter will be entertaining to those who were present at the late masquerade, as it will recal into their minds several merry particulars that passed in it, and at the same time, be very acceptable to those who were at a distance from it, as they may form from hence some idea of this fashionable amusement.

To NESTOR IRONSIDE, Esq;

Per via leonis.

S I R,

I Could scarce ever go into good company, but the discourse was on the ambassador, the politeness of his entertainments, the goodness of his Burgundy and Champaign, the gaiety of his masquerades, with the odd fantastical dresses which were made use of in those midnight solemnities. The noise these diversions made, at last raised my curiosity, and for once I resolved to be present at them, being at the same time provoked to it by a lady I then made my addressee to, one of a sprightly humour, and a great admirer of such novelties. In order to it I hurried my habit, and got it ready a week before the time, for I grew impatient to be initiated in these new mysteries. Every morning I dressed myself in it, and acted before the looking-glass, so that I am vain enough to think I was as perfect in my part, as most who had oftner frequented those diversions. You must understand I personated a Devil, and that for several weighty reasons. First, because appearing as one of that fraternity, I expected to meet with particular civilities from the ' more polite and better-bred part of the company. Be' sides, as from their usual reception they are called fa-

 ' miliars, I fancied I should, in this character, be allow' ed the greatest liberties, and soonest be led into the se' crets of the masquerade. To recommend and distin' guish me from the vulgar, I drew a very long tail after ' me. But to speak the truth, what persuaded me most
 ' to this disguise was, because I heard an intriguing lady
 ' say, in a large company of females, who unanimously
 ' assented to it, that she loved to converse with such, for
 ' that generally they were very clever fellows who made
 ' choice of that shape. At length when the long-wished-
 ' for evening came, which was to open to us such vast
 ' scenes of pleasure, I repaired to the place appointed
 ' about ten at night, where I found nature turned top-
 ' sy-turvy, women changed into men, and men into
 ' women, children in leading-strings seven foot high,
 ' courtiers transformed into clowns, ladies of the night
 ' into saints, people of the first quality into beasts or ' birds, gods or goddesses. I fancied I had all Ovid's
 ' Metamorphoses before me. Among these were seve' ral monsters to which I did not know how to give a
 ' name;

——— worse

Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceived,
 Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire. MILTON.

' In the middle of the first room I met with one
 ' dressed in a Shroud. This put me in mind of the old cus' tom of serving up a death's head at a feast. I was ' a little angry at the dress, and asked the gentleman
 ' whether he thought a dead man was fit company for ' such an assembly; but he told me, that he was one who ' loved his money, and that he considered this dress
 ' would serve him another time. This walking coarse
 ' was followed by a gigantick woman with a high ' crowned hat, that stood up like a steeple over the ' heads of the whole assembly. I then chanced to tread
 ' upon the foot of a female Quaker, to all outward ap' pearance; but was surprised to hear her cry out d—n
 ' you, you son of a — upon which I immediately re-
 ' buked her, when all of a sudden resuming her charac' ter,

ter, "Verily, says she, I was to blame; but thou hast
"bruised me sorely." "A few moments after this adven"ture, I had like to have been knocked down by a shep-
"herdess for having run my elbow a little inadvertently
"into one of her sides. She swore like a trooper, and "threatened me with a very masculine voice; but I was "timely taken off by a Presbyterian Parson, who told me
"in a very soft tone, that he believed I was a pretty fel"low, and that he would meet me in Spring-Garden to"morrow night. The next object I saw was a Chimney-
"sweeper made up of black crape and velvet, with a huge "diamond in his mouth, making love to a butterfly. On "a sudden I found myself among a flock of Bats, Owls,
"and Lawyers. But what took up my attention most
"was, one drest in white feathers that represented a Swan.
"He would fain have found out a Leda among the fair
"sex, and indeed was the most unlucky bird in the com"pany. I was then engaged in a discourse with a Run"ning footman; but as I treated him like what he appear"ed to be, a Turkish emperor whispered me in the ear, de-
"siring me "to use him civilly, for that it was his mas"ter." "I was here interrupted by the famous large fi"gure of a woman hung with little looking-glasses. She "had a great many that followed her as she passed by me,
"but I would not have her value herself upon that ac"count, since it was plain they did not follow so much "to look upon her as to see themselves. The next I "observed was a Nun making an assignation with a "Heathen God; for I heard them mention the Little "Piazza in Convent-Garden. I was by this time exceed"ing hot and thirsty; so that I made the best of my way
"to the place where wine was dealt about in great quan"tities. I had no sooner presented myself before the ta"ble, but a Magician seeing me, made a circle over my "head with his wand, and seemed to do me homage. I "was at a loss to account for his behaviour, until I recol-
"lected who I was: this however drew the eyes of the "servants upon me, and immediately procured me a glass
"of excellent Champaign. The Magician said I was a spi"rit of an adust and dry constitution; and desired that I "might have another refreshing glass; adding withal,
"that it ought to be a brimmer. I took it in my hand and drank it off to the Magician. This so enlivened me, that I led him by the hand into the next room, where we danced a rigadoon together. I was here a little offended at a jackanapes of a Scaramouch, that cried out, "Avant Satan;" and gave me a little tap on my left shoulder, with the end of his lath-sword. As I was considering how I ought to resent this affront, a well-shaped person that stood at my left-hand, in the figure of a Bellman, cried out with a suitable voice, "Past twelve o'clock." This put me in mind of Bed-time: Accordingly I made my way towards the door, but was intercepted by an Indian king, a tall, slender youth, dressed up in a most beautiful party-coloured plumage. He regarded my habit very attentively, and after having turned me about once or twice, asked me "whom I had been tempting:" I could not tell what was the matter with me, but my heart leaped as soon as he touched me, and was still in greater disorder, upon my hearing his voice. In short, I found after a little discourse with him, that his Indian majesty was my dear Leonora, who knowing the disguise I had put on, would not let me pass by her unobserved. Her awkward manliness made me guess at her sex, and her own confession quickly let me know the rest. This Maskerade did more for me than a twelve months courtship: For it inspired her with such tender sentiments, that I married her the next morning. How happy I shall be in a wife taken out of a Maskerade, I cannot yet tell; but I have reason to hope the best, Leonora having assured me it was the first, and shall be the last time of her appearing at such an entertainment.
"and

And now, Sir, having given you the history of this strange evening, which looks rather like a dream than a reality, it is my request to you, that you will oblige the world with a dissertation on Maskerades in general, that we may know how far they are useful to the public, and consequently how far they ought to be encouraged. I have heard of two or three very odd accidents that have happened upon this occasion, as in particular of a Lawyer's being now big-bellied, who was present at the first of these entertainments; not to mention

‘ mention (what is still more strange) an Old Man with ‘ a long beard, who was got with child by a Milk-Maid.
 ‘ But in cases of this nature, where there is such a con‘ fusion of sex, age and quality, men are apt to report ‘ rather what might have happened, than what really ‘ came to pass. Without giving credit therefore to any of ‘ these rumours, I shall only renew my petition to you,
 ‘ that you will tell us your opinion at large of these ‘ matters, and am,

SIR, &c.

LUCIFER.

N^o 155 Tuesday, September 8.

— Libelli Stoici inter sericos

Jacere pulvillos amant.

Hor. Epod. 8. v. 15.

The books of Stoicks ever chose
 On silken cushions to repose.

I Have often wondered that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Since they have the same improveable minds as the male part of the species, why should they not be cultivated by the same method? why should reason be left to itself in one of the sexes, and be disciplined with so much care in the other?

There are some reasons why learning seems more adapted to the female world, than to the male. As in the first place, because they have more spare time upon their hands, and lead a more sedentary life. Their employments are of a domestick nature, and not like those of the other sex, which are often inconsistent with study and contemplation. The excellent lady, the lady Lizard, in the space of one summer furnished a gallery with chairs and couches of her own and her daughters working; and at the same time heard all Doctor Tillotson's sermons twice over. It is always the custom for one of the young ladies to read, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial prejudicial to its manufactures. I was mightily pleased the other day to find them all busy in preserving several fruits of the season, with the Sparkler in the midst of them, reading over "The plurality of worlds." It was very entertaining to me to see them dividing their speculations between jellies and stars, and making a sudden transition from the sun to an apricot, or from the Copernican system to the figure of a cheese-cake.

A second reason why women should apply themselves to useful knowledge rather than men, is because they have that natural gift of Speech in greater perfection. Since they have so excellent a talent, such a Copia Verborum, or plenty of words, it is pity they should not put it to some use. If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be set to go right? Could they discourse about the spots in the sun, it might divert them from publishing the faults of their neighbours: Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of the planets, they need not be at the pains to comment upon oglings and clandestine marriages. In short, were they furnished with matters of fact, out of arts and sciences, it would now and then be of great ease to their invention.

There is another reason why those especially who are women of quality, should apply themselves to letters, namely, because their husbands are generally strangers to them.

It is great pity there should be no knowledge in a family. For my own part, I am concerned when I go into a great house, where perhaps there is not a single person that can spell, unless it be by chance the butler, or one of the footmen. What a figure is the young heir likely to make, who is a dunce both by father and mother's side?

If we look into the histories of famous women, we find many eminent philosophers of this sex. Nay, we find that several females have distinguished themselves in those sects of philosophy which seem almost repugnant to their natures. There have been famous female Pythagoreans, notwithstanding most of that philosophy consisted in keeping a secret, and that the disciple was to hold her tongue five years together. I need not mention Portia, who was a stoick in petticoats : nor Hipparchia, the famous she cynick, who arrived at such a perfection in her studies, that she conversed with her husband, or man-planter, in broad day light, and in the open streets.
not

Learning and knowledge are perfections in us, not as we are men, but as we are reasonable creatures, in which order of beings the female world is upon the same level with the male. We ought to consider in this particular, not what is the sex, but what is the species to which they belong. At least I believe every one will allow me, that a female philosopher is not so absurd a character and so opposite to the sex, as a female gamester ; and that it is more irrational for a woman to pass away half a dozen hours at cards or dice, than in getting up stores of useful learning. This therefore is another reason why I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands.

I might also add this motive to my fair readers, that several of their sex, who have improved their minds by books and literature, have raised themselves to the highest posts of honour and fortune. A neighbouring nation may at this time furnish us with a very remarkable instance of this kind ; but I shall conclude this head with the history of Athenais, which is a very signal example to my present purpose.

The emperor Theodosius being about the age of one and twenty, and designing to take a wife, desired his sister Pulcheria and his friend Paulinus to search his whole empire for a woman of the most exquisite beauty and highest accomplishments. In the midst of this search, Athenais, a Grecian virgin, accidentally offered herself. Her father, who was an eminent philosopher of Athens, and had bred her up in all the learning of that place, at his death left her but a very small portion, in which also she suffered great hardships from the injustice of her two brothers. This forced her upon a journey to Constantinople, where she had a relation who represented her case to Pulcheria in order to obtain some redress from the emperor. By this means that religious

religious princess became acquainted with Athenais, whom she found the most beautiful woman of her age, and educated under a long course of philosophy in the strictest virtue, and most unspotted innocence. Pulcheria was charmed with her conversation, and immediately made her reports to the emperor her brother Theodosius. The character she gave made such an impression on him, that he desired his sister to bring her away immediately to the lodgings of his friend Paulinus, where he found her beauty and her conversation beyond the highest idea he had framed of them. His friend Paulinus converted her to christianity, and gave her the name of Eudofia; after which the emperor publicly espoused her, and enjoyed all the happiness in his marriage which he promised himself from such a virtuous and learned bride. She not only forgave the injuries which her two brothers had done her, but raised them to great honours; and by several works of learning, as well as by an exemplary life, made herself so dear to the whole empire, that she had many statues erected to her memory, and is celebrated by the fathers of the church as the ornament of her sex.

Wednesday,

N^o 156 Wednesday, September 9.—Magni formica laborisOre trahit quodcunque potest, atque addit aceruo,Quem struit haud ignara, ac non incauta futuri.Quæ, simul inversum contristat Aquarius annum,Non usquam prorepat, & illis utitur antèQuæsitis patiens—

Hor. Sat. i. l. i. v. 33.

As the small ant (for she instructs the man,
 And preaches labour) gathers all she can,
 And brings it to increase her heap at home,
 Against the winter, which she knows will come:
 But, when that comes, she creeps abroad no more,
 But lies at home, and feasts upon her store.

CREECH.

IN my last Saturday's paper I supposed a molehill, inhabited by Pismires or Ants, to be a lively image of the earth, peopled by human creatures. This supposition will not appear too forced or strained to those who are acquainted with the natural history of these little insects; in order to which I shall present my reader with the extract of a letter upon this curious subject, as it was published by the members of the French academy, and since translated into English. I must confess I was never in my life better entertained than with this narrative, which is of undoubted credit and authority.

' In a room next to mine, which had been empty
 ' for a long time, there was upon a window a box full
 ' of earth, two foot deep, and fit to keep flowers in.
 ' That kind of parterre had been long uncultivated;
 ' and therefore it was covered with old plaister, and a ' great deal of rubbish that fell from the top of the ' house, and from the walls, which, together with
 ' the earth formerly imbibed with water, made a kind ' of a dry and barren soil. That place lying to the ' South, and out of the reach of the wind and rain,
 ' besides the neighbourhood of a granary, was a most ' delightful

‘ delightful spot of ground for Ants; and therefore ‘ they had made three nests there, without doubt for ‘ the same reason that men build cities in fruitful and ‘ convenient places, near springs and rivers.

‘ Having a mind to cultivate some flowers, I took a ‘ view of that place, and removed a tulip out of the ‘ garden into that box; but casting my eyes upon the ‘ Ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, ‘ very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the ‘ greatest importance for them, they appeared to me ‘ more worthy of my curiosity than all the flowers in ‘ the world. I quickly removed the tulip, to be the ‘ admirer and restorer of that little commonwealth.
‘ This was the only thing they wanted; for their po‘ licy and the order observed among them, are more ‘ perfect than those of the wisest republicks: and there‘ fore they have nothing to fear, unless a new legisla‘ tor should attempt to change the form of their go‘ vernment.

‘ I made it my business to procure them all sorts of ‘ conveniencies. I took out of the box every thing that ‘ might be troublesome to them; and frequently visited ‘ my Ants, and studied all their actions. Being used ‘ to go to bed very late, I went to see them work in a ‘ moon-shiny-night; and I did frequently get up in the ‘ night, to take a view of their labours. I always found ‘ some going up and down, and very busy: one would ‘ think that they never sleep. Every body knows that ‘ Ants come out of their holes in the day-time, and ‘ expose to the sun the corn, which they keep under ‘ ground in the night. Those who have seen ant-hil-
‘ locks, have easily perceived those small heaps of corn
‘ about their nests. What surprised me at first was,
‘ that my Ants never brought out their corn, but in the ‘ night when the moon did shine, and kept it under ‘ ground in the day-time? which was contrary to what I ‘ had seen, and saw still practised by those insects in other ‘ places. I quickly found out the reason of it: there ‘ was a pigeon-house not far from thence: pigeons and ‘ birds would have eaten their corn, if they had brought ‘ it out in the day-time. It is highly probable they ‘ knew it by experience; and I frequently found pige‘ ons

ons and birds in that place, when I went to it in a morning. I quickly delivered them from those robbers : I frightened the birds away with some pieces of paper tied to the end of a string over the window. As for the pigeons, I drove them away several times ; and and when they perceived that the place was more frequented than before, they never came to it again. What is most admirable, and what I could hardly believe, if I did not know it by experience, is, that those Ants knew some days after that they had nothing to fear, and began to lay out their corn in the sun. However, I perceived they were not fully convinced of being out of all danger ; for they durst not bring out their provisions all at once, but by degrees, first in a small quantity, and without any great order, that they might quickly carry them away in case of any misfortune, watching, and looking every way. At last, being persuaded that they had nothing to fear, they brought out all their corn, almost every day, and in good order, and carried it in at night.

There is a straight hole in every Ant's nest, about half an inch deep ; and then it goes down sloping into a place where they have their magazine, which I take to be a different place from that where they rest and eat. For it is highly improbable that an Ant, which is a very cleanly insect, and throws out of her nest all the small remains of the corn on which she feeds, as I have observed a thousand times, would fill up her magazine, and mix her corn with dirt and ordure.

The corn, that is laid up by Ants, would shoot under ground, if those insects did not take care to prevent it. They bite off all the buds before they lay it up ; and therefore the corn that has lain in their nests will produce nothing. Any one may easily make this experiment, and even plainly see that there is no bud in their corn. But though the bud be bitten off, there remains another inconvenience, that corn must needs swell and rot under ground ; and therefore it could be of no use to the nourishment of Ants. Those insects prevent that inconvenience by their labour and industry, and contrive the matter so, that corn will keep as dry in their nests as in our granaries.

They

‘ They gather many small particles of dry earth,
‘ which they bring every day out of their holes, and ‘ place them round to heat them in the sun. Every Ant
‘ brings a small particle of that earth in her pincers, ‘ lays it by the hole, and then goes and fetches another.
‘ Thus, in less than a quarter of an hour, one may see
‘ a vast number of such small particles of dry earth, ‘ heaped up round the hole. They lay their corn under ‘ ground upon that earth, and cover it with the same.
‘ They perform this work almost every day, during the ‘ heat of the sun ; and though the sun went from the ‘ window about three or four of the clock in the after‘ noon, they did not remove their corn and their par‘ ticles of earth, because the ground was very hot, until ‘ the heat was over.

‘ If any one should think that those animals should ‘ use sand, or small particles of brick or stone, rather ‘ than take so much pains about dry earth ; I answer,
‘ that upon such an occasion nothing can be more pro‘ per than earth heated in the sun. Corn does not keep ‘ upon sand : Besides, a grain of corn that is cut, be‘ ing deprived of its bud, would be filled with small ‘ sandy particles that could not easily come out. To ‘ which I add, that sand consists of such small particles,
‘ that an Ant could not take them up one after another ;
‘ and therefore those insects are seldom to be seen near ‘ rivers, or in a very sandy ground.

‘ As for the small particles of brick or stone, the least ‘ moistness would join them together, and turn them ‘ into a kind of mastick, which those insects could not ‘ divide. Those particles sticking together could not ‘ come out of an Ant’s nest, and would spoil its sym‘ metry.

‘ When Ants have brought out those particles of ‘ earth, they bring out their corn after the same manner,
‘ and place it round the earth. Thus one may see two ‘ heaps surrounding their hole, one of dry earth, and ‘ the other of corn ; and then they fetch out a remain‘ der of dry earth, on which doubtless their corn was ‘ laid up.

‘ Those insects never go about this work, but when ‘ the weather is clear, and the sun very hot. I observed,
‘ that

‘ that those little animals having one day brought out ‘ their corn at eleven of the clock in the forenoon, re‘ moved it, against their usual custom, before one in ‘ the afternoon: The sun being very hot, and sky very ‘ clear, I could perceive no reason for it. But half an ‘ hour after, the sky began to be overcast, and there ‘ fell a small rain which the Ants foresaw; whereas ‘ the Milan almanack had foretold there would be no ‘ rain upon that day.

‘ I have said before, that those Ants which I did so ‘ particularly consider, fetched their corn out of a gar-‘ ret. I went very frequently into that garret: There ‘ was some old corn in it; and because every grain was ‘ not alike, I observed that they chose the best.

‘ I know, by several experiments, that those little ‘ animals, take great care to provide themselves with ‘ wheat when they can find it, and always pick out the ‘ best; but they can make shift without it. When they ‘ can get no wheat, they take rye, oats, millet, and even ‘ crumbs of bread; but seldom any barley, unless it be ‘ in a time of great scarcity, and when nothing else ‘ can be had.

‘ Being willing to be more particularly informed of ‘ their forecast and industry, I put a small heap of ‘ wheat in a corner of the room, where they kept:
 ‘ And to prevent their fetching corn out of the garret,
 ‘ I shut up the window, and stoppt all the holes. Though ‘ Ants are very knowing, I do not take them to be con-‘ jurers; and therefore they could not guess that I had ‘ put some corn in that room. I perceived for several ‘ days that they were very much perplexed, and went
 ‘ a great way to fetch their provisions. I was not wil‘ ling for some time to make them more easy; for I had ‘ a mind to know, whether they would at last find out
 ‘ the treasure, and see it at a great distance; and whe‘ ther smelling enabled them to know what is good for ‘ their nourishment. Thus they were some time in great ‘ trouble, and took a great deal of pains: They went ‘ up and down a great way looking out for some grains
 ‘ of corn: They were sometimes disappointed, and ‘ sometimes they did not like their corn, after many long
 ‘ and painful excursions. What appeared to me won‘ derful,

derful, was, that none of them came home without bringing something: one brought a grain of wheat, another a grain of rye or oats, or a particle of dry earth, if she could get nothing else.

The window, upon which those Ants had made their settlement, looked into a garden, and was two stories high. Some went to the farther end of the garden, others to the fifth story, in quest of some corn. It was a very hard journey for them, especially when they came home loaded with a pretty large grain of corn, which must needs be a heavy burden for an Ant, and as much as she can bear. The bringing of that grain from the middle of the garden to the nest, took up four hours; whereby one may judge of the strength and prodigious labour of those little animals. It appears from thence, that an Ant works as hard as a man, who should carry a very heavy load on his shoulders almost every day for the space of four leagues. It is true, those insects do not take so much pains upon a flat ground: but then how great is the hardship of a poor Ant, when she carries a grain of corn to the second story, climbing up a wall with her head downwards, and her backside upwards? None can have a true notion of it, unless they see those little animals at work in such a situation. The frequent stops they made in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness. Some of them were strangely perplexed, and could not get to their journey's end. In such a case, the strongest Ants, or those that are not so weary, having carried their corn to their nests, came down again to help them. Some are so unfortunate as to fall down with their load, when they are almost come home: When this happens they seldom lose their corn, but carry it up again.

I saw one of the smallest carrying a large grain of wheat with incredible pains: When she came to the box where the nest was, she made so much haste that she fell down with her load, after a very laborious march: Such an unlucky accident would have vexed a philosopher. I went down, and found her with the same corn in her paws: She was ready to climb up again. The same misfortune happened to her three times:

‘ times. Sometimes she fell in the middle of her way,
 ‘ and sometimes higher; but she never let go her hold,
 ‘ and was not discouraged. At last her strength failed
 ‘ her: She stopt; and another Ant helped her to carry ‘ her load, which was one of the largest and finest grains
 ‘ of wheat that an Ant can carry. It happens sometimes,
 ‘ that a corn slips out of their paws, when they are ‘ climbing up: They take hold of it again, when they ‘ can find it; otherwise they look for another, or take ‘ something else, being ashamed to return to their nest
 ‘ without bringing something. This I have experiment‘ ed, by taking away the grain which they looked for.
 ‘ All those experiments may easily be made by any one
 ‘ that has patience enough: They do not require so ‘ great a patience as that of Ants; but few people are ‘ capable of it.

N^o 157 Thursday, September 10.

Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise. Prov. vi. 6.

IT has been observed by writers of morality, that in order to quicken human industry, Providence has so contrived it, that our daily food is not to be procured without much pains and labour. The chase of birds and beasts, the several arts of fishing, with all the different kinds of agriculture, are necessary scenes of business, and give employment to the greatest part of mankind. If we look into the brute creation, we find all its individuals engaged in a painful and laborious way of life, to procure a necessary subsistence for themselves, or those that grow up under them: The preservation of their being is the whole business of it. An idle man is therefore a kind of monster in the creation.
 All nature is busy about him; every animal he sees re-proaches him. Let such a man, who lies as a burden or dead weight upon the species, and contributes nothing either

either to the riches of the commonwealth, or to the maintenance of himself and family, consider that instinct with which Providence has endowed the Ant, and by which is exhibited an example of industry to rational creatures. This is set forth under many surprizing instances in the paper of yesterday, and in the conclusion of that narrative, which is as follows:

‘ Thus my Ants were forced to make shift for a ‘ livelihood, when I had shut up the garret, out of ‘ which they used to fetch their provisions. At last be‘ ing sensible that it would be a long time before they ‘ could discover the small heap of corn, which I had ‘ laid up for them, I resolved to shew it to them.

‘ In order to know how far their industry could ‘ reach, I contrived an expedient, which had good ‘ success: The thing will appear incredible to those,
‘ who never considered, that all animals of the same ‘ kind, which form a society, are more knowing than ‘ others. I took one of the largest Ants, and threw ‘ her upon that small heap of wheat. She was so glad ‘ to find herself at liberty, that she ran away to ‘ her nest, without carrying off a grain; but she ob‘ served it: For an hour after all my Ants had notice ‘ given them of such a provision; and I saw most of ‘ them very busy in carrying away the corn I had laid ‘ up in the room. I leave it to you to judge, whether ‘ it may not be said, that they have a particular way
‘ of communicating their knowledge to one another;
‘ for otherwise how could they know, one or two hours
‘ after, that there was corn in that place? It was quickly ‘ exhausted; and I put in more, but in a small quantity,
‘ to know the true extent of their appetite or prodigious
‘ avarice; for I make no doubt but they lay up pro‘ visions against the winter: We read it in holy scrip‘ ture; a thousand experiments teach us the same; and ‘ I do not believe that any experiment has been made ‘ that shews the contrary.

‘ I have said before, that there were three Ants-nests
‘ in that box or parterre, which formed, if I may say
‘ so, three different cities, governed by the same laws,
‘ and observing the same order, and the same customs.
‘ However there was this difference, that the inhabitants
‘ of

‘ of one of those holes seemed to be more knowing and ‘ industrious than their neighbours. The Ants of that ‘ nest were disposed in a better order; their corn was ‘ finer; they had a greater plenty of provisions; their ‘ nest was furnished with more inhabitants, and they ‘ were bigger and stronger: It was the principal and
‘ the capital nest. Nay, I observed that those Ants were ‘ distinguished from the rest, and had some preeminence ‘ over them.

‘ Though the box full of earth, where the Ants had ‘ made their settlement, was generally free from rain;
‘ yet it rained sometimes upon it, when a certain wind
‘ blew. It was a great inconvenience for those insects:
‘ Ants are afraid of water; and when they go a great ‘ way in quest of provisions, and are surprised by the ‘ rain, they shelter themselves under some tile, or some‘ thing else, and do not come out until the rain is over.
‘ The Ants of the principal nest found out a wonderful ‘ expedient to keep out the rain: There was a small ‘ piece of a flat slate, which they laid over the hole of ‘ their nest in the day-time, when they foresaw it ‘ would rain, and almost every night. Above fifty of ‘ those little animals, especially the strongest, surrounded
‘ that piece of slate, and drew it equally in a wonderful ‘ order: They removed it in the morning; and nothing ‘ could be more curious than to see those little animals
‘ about such a work. They had made the ground un‘ even about their nest, insomuch that the slate did not ‘ lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. The ‘ Ants of the two other nests did not so well succeed in ‘ keeping out the rain: They laid over their holes ‘ several pieces of old and dry plaister one upon the ‘ other; but they were still troubled with the rain,
‘ and the next day they took a world of pains to ‘ repair the damage. Hence it is, that those insects ‘ are so frequently to be found under tiles, where ‘ they settle themselves to avoid the rain. Their nests ‘ are at all times covered with those tiles, without ‘ any incumbrance, and they lay out their corn and ‘ their dry earth in the sun about the tiles, as one ‘ may see every day. I took care to cover the two ‘ Ants-nests that were troubled with the rain: As for

‘ the capital nest, there was no need of exercising my ‘ charity towards it.

‘ M. de la Loubere says in his relation of Siam, that ‘ in a certain part of that kingdom, which lies open to ‘ great inundations, all the Ants make their settlements ‘ upon trees : No Ants-nests are to be seen any where ‘ else. I need not insert here what that author says ‘ about those insects : You may see his relation.

‘ Here follows a curious experiment, which I made ‘ upon the same ground, where I had three Ants-nests.
‘ I undertook to make a fourth, and went about it in ‘ the following manner. In a corner of a kind of a ‘ terras, at a considerable distance from the box, I found ‘ a hole swarming with Ants much larger than all those
‘ I had already seen ; but they were not so well provided
‘ with corn, nor under so good a government. I made
‘ a hole in the box like that of an Ant’s-nest, and laid,
‘ as it were, the foundations of a new city. Afterwards
‘ I got as many Ants as I could out of the nest in the ‘ terras, and put them into a bottle, to give them a ‘ new habitation in my box ; and because I was afraid
‘ they would return to the terras, I destroyed their old ‘ nest, pouring boiling water into the hole, to kill ‘ those Ants that remained in it. In the next place, I ‘ filled the new hole with the Ants that were in the ‘ bottle ; but none of them would stay in it. They went ‘ away in less than two hours ; which made me believe, ‘ that it was impossible to make a fourth settlement in ‘ my box.

‘ Two or three days after, going accidentally over
‘ the terras, I was much surpris’d to see the Ants‘ nest which I had destroyed very artfully repaired. I ‘ resolv’d then to destroy it entirely, and to settle those ‘ Ants in my box. To succeed in my design, I put some ‘ gun-powder and brimstone into their hole, and sprung
‘ a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown ; and ‘ then I carried as many Ants as I could get, into the ‘ place which I design’d for them. It happened to be a ‘ very rainy day, and it rained all night ; and therefore ‘ they remained in the new hole all that time. In the ‘ morning when the rain was over, most of them went ‘ away to repair their old habitation ; but finding it im‘ practicable

‘ practicable by reason of the smell of the powder and ‘ brimstone, which kills them, they came back again,
 ‘ and settled in the place I had appointed for them.
 ‘ They quickly grew acquainted with their neighbours,
 ‘ and received from them all manner of assistance out of ‘ their holes. As for the inside of their nest, none but ‘ themselves were concerned it, according to the in‘ violable laws established among those animals.

‘ An Ant never goes into any other nest but her ‘ own; and if she should venture to do it, she would be ‘ turned out, and severely punished. I have often taken ‘ an Ant out of one nest, to put her into another; but ‘ she quickly came out, being warmly pursued by two ‘ or three other Ants. I tried the same experiment
 ‘ several times with the same Ant; but at last the other ‘ Ants grew impatient, and tore her to pieces. I have ‘ often frightened some Ants with my fingers, and pursued
 ‘ them as far as another hole, stopping all the passages
 ‘ to prevent their going to their own nest. It was very ‘ natural for them to fly into the next hole: Many a ‘ man would not be so cautious, and would throw him‘ self out of the windows, or into a well, if he were ‘ pursued by assassins. But the Ants I am speaking of, ‘ avoided going into any other hole but their own, and ‘ rather tried all other ways of making their escape. They ‘ never fled into another nest, but at the last extremity;
 ‘ and sometimes chose rather to be taken, as I have often ‘ experienced. It is therefore an inviolable custom among ‘ those insects, not to go into any other hole but their ‘ own. They do not exercise hospitality; but they are ‘ very ready to help one another out of their holes. They ‘ put down their loads at the entrance of a neighbour‘ ing nest; and those that live in it, carry them in.

‘ They keep up a sort of trade among themselves;
 ‘ and it is not true that those insects are not for lend‘ ing: I know the contrary: They lend their corn;
 ‘ they make exchanges; they are always ready to serve
 ‘ one another; and I can assure you, that more time
 ‘ and patience would have enabled me to observe a ‘ thousand things more curious and wonderful than ‘ what I have mentioned. For instance how they lend
 ‘ and recover their loans; whether it be in the same ‘ quantity,

‘ quantity, or with usury; whether they pay the ‘ strangers that work for them, &c. I do not think it ‘ impossible to examine all those things: and it would ‘ be a great curiosity to know by what maxims they ‘ govern themselves: Perhaps such a knowledge might ‘ be of some use to us.

‘ They are never attacked by any enemies in a body,
‘ as it is reported of bees: Their only fear proceeds from ‘ birds, which sometimes eat their corn when they lay
‘ it out in the sun; but they keep it under ground, ‘ when they are afraid of thieves. It is said that some ‘ birds eat them; but I never saw any instance of it.
‘ They are also infested by small worms; but they turn ‘ them out, and kill them. I observed, that they pu‘ nished those Ants, which probably had been wanting
‘ to their duty: Nay, sometimes they killed them;
‘ which they did in the following manner. Three or ‘ four Ants fell upon one, and pulled her several ways, ‘ until she was torn in pieces. Generally speaking they ‘ live very quietly; from whence I infer that they have ‘ a very severe discipline among themselves, to keep so ‘ good an order; or that they are great lovers of peace,
‘ if they have no occasion for any discipline.

‘ Was there ever a greater union in any common‘ wealth? Every thing is common among them; which ‘ is not to be seen any where else. Bees, of which we ‘ are told so many wonderful things, have each of them
‘ a hole in their hives; their honey is their own; every ‘ bee minds her own concerns. The same may be said
‘ of all other animals. They frequently fight, to deprive
‘ one another of their portion. It is not so with Ants:
‘ They have nothing of their own: A grain of corn
‘ which an Ant carries home, is deposited in a common ‘ stock: It is not designed for her own use, but for the ‘ whole community: There is no distinction between ‘ a private and a common interest. An Ant never works
‘ for herself, but for the society.

‘ Whatever misfortune happens to them, their care
‘ and industry find out a remedy for it; nothing dis‘ courages them. If you destroy their nests, they will ‘ be repaired in two days. Any body may easily see ‘ how difficult it is to drive them out of their habita‘ tions,

‘ tions, without destroying the inhabitants; for, as long ‘ as there are any left, they will maintain their ground.
 ‘ I had almost forgot to tell you, Sir, that Mercury ‘ has hitherto proved a mortal poison for them; and ‘ that it is the most effectual way of destroying those ‘ insects. I can do something for them in this case:
 ‘ Perhaps you will hear in a little time that I have re‘ conciled them to Mercury.

N^o 158 Friday, September 11.

*Gnosſus hæc Rhadamanthus habet duriffima regna;
 Castigatque, auditque dolos; ſubigitque fateri
 Quæ quis apud ſuperos, furto lætatus inani,
 Diſtulit in ſeram commiſſa piacula mortem.*

Virg. Æn. 6. v. 566.

These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
 And awful Rhadamanthus rules the ſtate.
 He hears, and judges, each committed crime;
 Enquires into the manner, place, and time.
 The conſcious wretch muſt all his acts reveal,
 Loth to confeſs, unable to conceal,
 From the firſt moment of his vital breath,
 To the laſt hour of unrepenting death. DRYDEN.

I Was yeſterday purſuing the hint which I mentioned in my laſt paper, and comparing together the in-duſtry of man with that of other creatures; in which I could not but obſerve, that notwithſtanding we are obliged by duty to keep ourſelves in conſtant employ, after the ſame manner as inferior animals are prompted to it by inſtinct, we fall very ſhort of them in this particular. We are here the more inexcusable, becauſe there is a greater variety of buſineſs to which we may apply ourſelves. Reason opens to us a large field of affairs, which other creatures are not capable of. Beaſts of prey, and I believe of all other kinds, in their natural ſtate of being,

being, divide their time between action and rest. They are always at work or asleep. In short their waking hours are wholly taken up in seeking after their food, or in consuming it. The human species only, to the great reproach of our natures, are filled with complaints, that "the day hangs heavy on them," that "they do not know what to do with themselves," that "they are at a loss how to pass away their time," with many of the like shameful murmurs, which we often find in the mouths of those who are stiled reasonable beings. How monstrous are such expressions among creatures, who have the labours of the mind, as well as those of the body, to furnish them with proper employments; who, besides the business of their proper callings and professions, can apply themselves to the duties of religion, to meditation, to the reading of useful books, to discourse; in a word, who may exercise themselves in the unbounded pursuits of knowledge and virtue, and every hour of their lives make themselves wiser or better than they were before.

After having been taken up for some time in this course of thought, I diverted myself with a book according to my usual custom, in order to unbend my mind before I went to sleep. The book I made use of on this occasion was Lucian, where I amused my thoughts for about an hour among the dialogues of the dead, which in all probability produced the following dream.

I was conveyed, methought, into the entrance of the infernal regions, where I saw Rhadamanthus, one of the judges of the dead, seated in his tribunal. On his left-hand stood the keeper of Erebus, on his right the keeper of Elysium. I was told he sat upon women that day, there being several of the sex lately arrived, who had not yet their mansions assigned them. I was surprised to hear him ask every one of them the same question, namely, "What they had been doing?" Upon this question being proposed to the whole assembly, they stared one upon another, as not knowing what to answer. He then interrogated each of them separately. Madam, says he, to the first of them, you have been upon the earth about fifty years: What have you been doing there all this while? Doing, says she, really I do not know what I have been doing: I desire I may have time given me to recollect. After about half an hour's pause she told him, that she had been playing at crimp; upon which Rhadamanthus beckoned to the keeper on his left-hand, to take her into custody. And you, Madam, says the judge, that look with such a soft and languishing air; I think you set out for this place in your nine and twentieth year, what have you been doing all this while? I had a great deal of business on my hands, says she, being taken up the first twelve years of my life, in dressing a jointed baby, and all the remaining part of it in reading plays and romances. Very well, says he, you have employed your time to good purpose. Away with her. The next was a plain country-woman; Well mistress, says Rhadamanthus, and what have you been doing? An't please your worship, says she, I did not live quite forty years; and in that time brought my husband seven daughters, made him nine thousand cheeses, and left my eldest girl with him, to look after his house in my absence, and who I may venture to say is as pretty a housewife as any in the country. Rhadamanthus smiled at the simplicity of the good woman, and ordered the keeper of Elysium to take her into his care. And you, fair lady, says he, what have you been doing these five and thirty years? I have been doing no hurt, I assure you, Sir, said she. That is well, said he, but what good have you been doing? The lady was in great confusion at this question, and not knowing what to answer, the two keepers leaped out to seize her at the same time; the one took her by the hand to convey her to Elysium, the other caught hold of her to carry her away to Erebus. But Rhadamanthus observing an ingenuous modesty in her countenance and behaviour, bid them both let her loose, and set her aside for a re-examination when he was more at leisure. An old woman, of a proud and sour look, presented herself next at the bar, and being asked what she had been doing? Truly, says she, I lived threescore and ten years in a very wicked world, and was so angry at the behaviour of a parcel of young flirts, that I past most of my last years in condemning the follies of the times; I was every day blaming the filly conduct of people about me, in order to deter those I conversed with from falling into the like errors and miscarriages. Very well, says Rhadamanthus, but did you keep the same watchful eye over your own actions? Why truly, says she, I was so taken up with publishing the faults of others, that I had no time to consider my own. Madam, says Rhadamanthus, be pleased to file off to the left, and make room for the venerable matron that stands behind you. Old gentlewoman, says he, I think you are fourscore. You have heard the question, what have you been doing so long in the world? Ah, Sir! says she, I have been doing what I should not have done, but I had made a firm resolution to have changed my life, if I had not been snatched off by an untimely end. Madam, says he, you will please to follow your leader; and spying another of the same age, interrogated her in the same form. To which the matron replied, I have been the wife of a husband who was as dear to me in his old age as in his youth. I have been a mother, and very happy in my children, whom I endeavoured to bring up in every thing that is good. My eldest son is blest by the poor, and beloved by every one that knows him. I lived within my own family, and left it much more wealthy than I found it. Rhadamanthus, who knew the value of the old lady, smiled upon her in such a manner, that the keeper of Elysium, who knew his office, reached out his hand to her. He no sooner touched her but her wrinkles vanished, her eyes sparkled, her cheeks glowed with blushes, and she appeared in full bloom and beauty. A young woman observing that this officer, who conducted the happy to Elysium, was so great a beautifier, longed to be in his hands; so that pressing through the croud, she was the next that appeared at the bar. And being asked what she had been doing the five and twenty years that she had past in the world, I have endeavoured, says she, ever since I came to years of discretion, to make myself lovely, and gain admirers. In order to it, I past my time in bottling up May-dew, inventing white-washes, mixing colours, cutting out patches, consulting my glass, suiting my complexion, tearing off my tucker, sinking my stays—Rhadamanthus, thus, without hearing her out, gave the sign to take her off. Upon the approach of the keeper of Erebus her colour faded, her face was puckered up with wrinkles, and her whole person lost in deformity.
not

I was then surprised with a distant sound of a whole troop of females that came forward, laughing, singing and dancing. I was very desirous to know the reception they would meet with, and withal was very apprehensive, that Rhadamanthus would spoil their mirth: But at their nearer approach the noise grew so very great that it awakened me.

I lay some time, reflecting in myself on the oddness of this dream, and could not forbear asking my own heart, what I was doing? I answered myself, that I was writing GUARDIANS. If my readers make as good a use of this work as I design they should, I hope it will never be imputed to me as work that is vain and unprofitable.

I shall conclude this paper with recommending to them the same short self-examination. If every one of them frequently lays his hand upon his heart, and considers what he is doing, it will check him in all the idle, or what is worse, the vicious moments of life, lift up his mind when it is running on in a series of indifferent actions, and encourage him when he is engaged in those which are virtuous and laudable. In a word, it will very much alleviate that guilt which the best of men have reason to acknowledge in their daily confessions, of “leaving undone those things which they ought to have “done, and of doing those things which they ought not “to have done.”

N^o 159 Saturday, September 12.

Præsens vel imo tollere de gradu

Mortale corpus, vel supercos

Vertere funeribus triumphos. Hor. Od. 35. l. 1. v. 2.

Whose force is strong, and quick to raise

The lowest to the highest place;

Or with a wond'rous fall

To bring the haughty lower,

And turn proud triumphs to a funeral.

CREECH.

S I R,

‘ HAVING read over your paper of Tuesday last, in ‘ which you recommend the pursuits of wisdom
 ‘ and knowledge to those of the fair sex, who have ‘ much time lying upon their hands, and among other ‘ motives make use of this, that several women, thus ‘ accomplished, have raised themselves by it to confi‘ derable posts of honour and fortune: I shall beg leave
 ‘ to give you an instance of this kind, which many now ‘ living can testify the truth of, and which I can assure ‘ you is matter of fact.

‘ About twelve years ago I was familiarly ac‘ quainted with a gentleman, who was in a post that ‘ brought him a yearly revenue, sufficient to live very ‘ handsomely upon. He had a wife, and no child but a ‘ daughter, whom he bred up, as I thought, too high
 ‘ for one that could expect no other fortune than such a ‘ one as her father could raise out of the income of his ‘ place; which as they managed it was scarce sufficient ‘ for their ordinary expences. Miss Betty had always
 ‘ the best sort of clothes, and was hardly allowed to keep ‘ company but with those above her rank; so that it ‘ was no wonder she grew proud and haughty towards ‘ those she looked upon as her inferiors. There lived
 ‘ by them a barber who had a daughter about miss’s
 ‘ age, that could speak French, had read several books

‘ at

‘ at her leisure hours, and was a perfect mistress of her ‘ needle and in all kinds of female manufacture. She ‘ was at the same time a pretty modest, witty girl. She ‘ was hired to come to Miss an hour or two every day,
‘ to talk French with her and teach her to work; but ‘ Miss always treated her with great contempt; and when ‘ Molly gave her any advice, rejected it with scorn.

‘ About the same time several young fellows made
‘ their addresses to Miss Betty, who had indeed a great ‘ deal of wit and beauty, had they not been infected
‘ with so much vanity and self-conceit. Among the rest ‘ was a plain sober young man, who loved her almost to ‘ distraction. His passion was the common talk of the ‘ neighbourhood, who used to be often discoursing of ‘ Mr. T——’s angel, for that was the name he always ‘ gave her in ordinary conversation. As his circum‘ stances were very indifferent, he being a younger bro‘ ther, Mrs. Betty rejected him with disdain. Infomuch ‘ that the young man, as is usual among those who are ‘ crossed in love, put himself aboard the fleet, with a re‘ solution to seek his fortune, and forget his mistress.
‘ This was very happy for him, for in a very few years,
‘ being concerned in several captures, he brought home
‘ with him an estate of about twelve thousand pounds.

‘ Mean while days and years went on, Miss lived ‘ high, and learnt but little, most of her time being em‘ ployed in reading plays and practising to dance, in ‘ which she arrived at great perfection. When of a sud‘ den, at a change of ministry, her father lost his place,
‘ and was forced to leave London, where he could no long‘ er live upon the foot he had formerly done. Not many ‘ years after I was told the poor gentleman was dead, and ‘ had left his widow and daughter in a very desolate
‘ condition, but I could not learn where to find them, ‘ tho’ I made what inquiry I could; and I must own, I ‘ immediately suspected their pride would not suffer them
‘ to be seen or relieved by any of their former acquain‘ tance. I had left enquiring after them for some years,
‘ when I happened, not long ago, as I was asking at a ‘ house for a gentleman I had some business with, to be ‘ led into a parlour by a handsome young woman, who I ‘ presently fancied was that very daughter I had so long ‘ sought

‘ sought in vain. My suspicion increased, when I observed her to blush at the sight of me, and to avoid, as much as possible, looking upon, or speaking to me ; Madam, said I, are not you, Mrs. such-a-one: At which words the tears ran down her cheeks, and she would fain have retired without giving me an answer; but I stopped her, and being to wait a while for the gentleman I was to speak to, I resolved not to lose this opportunity of satisfying my curiosity. I could not well discern by her dress, which was genteel, tho’ not fine, whether she was the mistress of the house, or only a servant: But supposing her to be the first, I am glad, Madam, said I, after having long enquired after you, to have so happily met with you, and to find you mistress of so fine a place. These words were like to have spoiled all, and threw her into such a disorder, that it was some time before she could recover herself; but as soon as she was able to speak, Sir, said she, you are mistaken; I am but a servant. Her voice fell in these last words, and she burst again into tears. I was sorry to have occasioned in her so much grief and confusion, and said what I could to comfort her. Alas, Sir, said she, my condition is much better than I deserve. I have the kindest and best of women for my mistress. She is wife to the gentleman you come to speak withal. You know her very well, and have often seen her with me. To make my story short, I found that my late friend’s daughter was now a servant to the barber’s daughter whom she had formerly treated so disdainfully. The gentleman at whose house I now was, fell in love with Moll, and being master of a great fortune, married her, and lives with her as happily, and as much to his satisfaction as he could desire. He treats her with all the friendship and respect possible, but not with more than her behaviour and good qualities deserve. And it was with a great deal of pleasure I heard her maid dwell so long upon her commendation. She informed me, that after her father’s death, her mother and she lived for a while together in great poverty. But her mother’s spirit could not bear the thoughts of asking relief of any of her own, or her husband’s acquaintance; so they retired from all their friends, until they ‘ were

‘ were providentially discovered by this new-married ‘ woman, who heaped on them favours upon favours.
 ‘ Her mother died shortly after, who, while she lived,
 ‘ was better pleased to see her daughter a beggar, than ‘ a servant; but being freed by her death, she was taken ‘ into this gentlewoman’s family, where she now lived, ‘ though much more like a friend or a companion, than ‘ like a servant.

‘ I went home full of this strange adventure; and ‘ about a week after chancing to be in company with ‘ Mr. T. the rejected lover, whom I mentioned in the ‘ beginning of my letter, I told him the whole story
 ‘ of his angel, not questioning but he would feel on this ‘ occasion, the usual pleasures of a resenting lover,
 ‘ when he hears that fortune has avenged him of the ‘ cruelty of his mistress. As I was recounting to him
 ‘ at large these several particulars, I observed that he ‘ covered his face with his hand, and that his breast ‘ heaved as though it would have bursted, which I took
 ‘ at first to have been a fit of laughter; but upon lift‘ ing up his head, I saw his eyes all red with weeping.
 ‘ He forced a smile at the end of my story, and we parted.

‘ About a fortnight after I received from him the ‘ following letter.

“ Dear S I R,

“ I Am infinitely obliged to you for bringing me news
 “ of my angel. I have since married her, and think “ the low circumstances she was reduced to a piece of “ good luck to both of us, since it has quite removed “ that little pride and vanity, which was the only part “ of her character that I disliked, and given me an op“ portunity of shewing her the constant and sincere af“ fection which I professed to her in the time of her “ prosperity.”

✍

Yours, R. T.

Monday,

N^o 160 Monday, September 14.

Solventur risu tabulæ, tu missus abibis.

Hor. Sat. 1. l. 2. v. ult.

IMITATED.

My lords the judges laugh, and you're dismiss'd.

POPE.

FROM writing the history of Lions, I lately went off to that of Ants; but to my great surprize, I find that some of my good readers have taken this last to be a work of invention, which was only a plain narrative of matter of fact. They will several of them have it that my last Thursday and Friday's papers are full of concealed satire, and that I have attacked people in the shape of Pismires, whom I durst not meddle with in the shape of men. I must confess that I write with fear and trembling, ever since that ingenious person the Examiner in his little pamphlet, which was to make way for one of his following papers, found out treason in the word Expect.

But I shall, for the future, leave my friend to manage the controversy in a separate work, being unwilling to fill with disputes a paper which was undertaken purely out of good-will to my countrymen. I must therefore declare that those jealousies and suspicions, which have been raised in some weak minds, by means of the two above-mentioned discourses concerning Ants or Pismires, are altogether groundless. There is not an Emmet in all that whole narrative who is either whig or tory; and I could heartily wish, that the individuals of all parties among us, had the good of their country at heart, and endeavoured to advance it by the same spirit of frugality, justice, and mutual benevolence, as are visibly exercised by the members of those little commonwealths.

After

After this short preface, I shall lay before my reader a letter or two which occasioned it.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

I Have laid a wager with a friend of mine about the Pigeons that used to peck up the corn which belonged to the Ants. I say that by these pigeons you meant the Palatines. He will needs have it that they were the Dutch. We both agree that the papers upon the strings, which frightened them away, were Pamphlets, Examiners, and the like. We beg you will satisfy us in this particular, because the wager is very considerable, and you will much oblige two of your Daily readers.

Old IRON,

W Hy so rusty? Will you never leave your innuendoes? Do you think it hard to find out who is the tulip in your last Thursday's paper? or can you imagine that three nests of Ants is such a disguise, that the plainest reader cannot see three kingdoms through it: The blowing up of a neighbouring settlement, where there was a race of poor beggarly Ants, under a worse form of government, is not so difficult to be explained, as you imagine. Dunkirk is not yet demolished. Your Ants are enemies to rain, are they! Old BERMINGHAM, no more of your Ants, if you don't intend to stir up a nest of Hornets.

WILL. WASPE.

Dear GUARDIAN.

C Alling in yesterday at a coffee-house in the city, I saw a very short, corpulent, angry man reading your paper about the Ants. I observed that he reddened and swelled over every sentence of it. After having perused it throughout, he laid it down upon the table, called the woman of the coffee-house to him, and asked her in a magisterial voice, if she knew what she did in taking in such papers! The woman was in such a confusion, that I thought it a piece of charity to interpose in her behalf, and asked him whether he had found any thing in it of dangerous import. Sir, said he, it is a Republican paper from one end

‘ end to the other, and if the author had his deserts—
‘ He here grew so exceeding cholerick and fierce, that ‘ he could not proceed; till after having recovered him‘ self, he laid his finger upon the following sentence, and ‘ read it with a very stern voice—“ Though Ants are “ very knowing, I don’t take them to be conjurers: And “ therefore they could not guess that I had put some “ corn in that room. I perceived for several days that “ they were very much perplexed, and went a great “ way to fetch their provisions. I was not willing for “ some time to make them more easy; for I had a mind
“ to know whether they would at last find out the trea“ sure, and see it at a great distance, and whether smell“ ing enabled them to know what is good for their “ nourishment.” Then throwing the paper upon the ‘ table; Sir, says he, these things are not to be suf‘ fered—I would engage out of this sentence to draw ‘ up an indictment that—He here lost his voice a se‘ cond time, in the extremity of his rage; and the whole ‘ company, who were all of them Tories, bursting out ‘ into a sudden laugh, he threw down his penny in great ‘ wrath, and retired with a most formidable frown.

‘ This, Sir, I thought fit to acquaint you with, that ‘ you may make what use of it you please. I only wish ‘ that you would sometimes diversify your papers with ‘ many other pieces of natural history, whether of in‘ sects or animals; this being a subject which the most ‘ common reader is capable of understanding, and which ‘ is very diverting in its nature; besides, that it highly ‘ redounds to the praise of that Being who has inspired ‘ the several parts of the sensitive world with such ‘ wonderful and different kinds of instinct as enable ‘ them to provide for themselves, and preserve their ‘ species in that state of existence wherein they are ‘ placed. There is no party concerned in speculations
‘ of this nature, which instead of inflaming those un‘ natural heats that prevail among us, and take up
‘ most of our thoughts, may divert our minds to subjects
‘ that are useful, and suited to reasonable creatures.
‘ Dissertations of this kind are the more proper for your ‘ purpose, as they do not require any depth of mathe‘ matics, or any previous science, to qualify the rea‘ der

‘ der for the understanding of them. To this I might ‘ add, that it is a shame for men to be ignorant of ‘ these worlds of wonders which are transacted in the ‘ midst of them, and not be acquainted with those ob‘ jects which are every where before their eyes. To ‘ which I might further add, that several are of opinion, ‘ there is no other use in many of these creatures than ‘ to furnish matter of contemplation and wonder to those ‘ inhabitants of the earth, who are its only creatures
 ‘ that are capable of it.”

I am, SIR,

Your constant reader, and humble servant.

After having presented my reader with this set of letters which are all upon the same subject, I shall here insert one that has no relation to it. But it has always been my maxim never to refuse going out of my way to do any honest man a service, especially when I have an interest in it myself.

Most venerable NESTOR,

‘ AS you are a person that very eminently distinguish ‘ yourself in the promotion of the publick good,
 ‘ I desire your friendship in signifying to the town,
 ‘ what concerns the greatest good of life, health. I do ‘ assure you, Sir, there is in a vault under the Exchange
 ‘ in Cornhill, over-against Pope’s-Head-Alley, a parcel
 ‘ of French wines, full of the seeds of good-humour, ‘ chearfulness and friendly mirth. I have been told,
 ‘ the learned of our nation agree, there is no such thing
 ‘ as bribery in liquors, therefore I shall presume to send ‘ you of it, lest you should think it inconsistent with ‘ integrity to recommend what you do not understand
 ‘ by experience. In the mean time please to insert this,
 ‘ that every man may judge for himself.”

I am, SIR, &c.

Tuesday,

N^o 161 Tuesday, September 15.

—Incoctum generoso pectus honesto. Pers. Sat. 2. v. 74.

A genuine virtue of a vigorous kind,
Pure in the last recesses of the mind. DRYDEN.

EVERY principle that is a motive to good actions ought to be encouraged, since men are of so different a make, that the same principle does not work equally upon all minds. What some men are prompted to by conscience, duty, or religion, which are only different names for the same thing, others are prompted to by honour.

The sense of honour is of so fine and delicate a nature, that it is only to be met with in minds which are naturally noble, or in such as have been cultivated by great examples, or a refined education. This paper therefore is chiefly designed for those who by means of any of these advantages are, or ought to be actuated by this glorious principle.

But as nothing is more pernicious than a principle of action, when it is misunderstood, I shall consider honour with respect to three sorts of men. First of all, with regard to those who have a right notion of it. Secondly, with regard to those who have a mistaken notion of it. And thirdly, with regard to those who treat it as chimerical, and turn it into ridicule.

In the first place, true honour, though it be a different principle from religion, is that which produces the same effects. The lines of action, though drawn from different parts, terminate in the same point. Religion embraces virtue, as it is enjoined by the laws of God; Honour, as it is graceful and ornamental to human nature. The religious man fears, the man of honour scorns to do an ill action. The latter considers vice as something that is beneath him, the other as something that is offensive to the divine Being. The one as

as what is unbecoming, the other as what is forbidden. Thus Seneca speaks in the natural and genuine language of a man of honour, when he declares that were there no God to see or punish vice, he would not commit it, because it is of so mean, so base, and so vile a nature.

I shall conclude this head with the description of honour in the part of young Juba.

Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,
And imitates her actions where she is not.
It ought not to be sported with.—— CATO.

In the second place, we are to consider those who have mistaken notions of honour. And these are such as establish any thing to themselves for a point of honour which is contrary either to the laws of God, or of their country; who think it more honourable to revenge than to forgive an injury; who make no scruple of telling a lye, but would put any man to death that accuses them of it; who are more careful to guard their reputation by their courage than by their virtue. True fortitude is indeed so becoming in human nature, that he who wants it scarce deserves the name of a man; but we find several who so much abuse this notion, that they place the whole idea of honour in a kind of brutal courage; by which means we have had many among us who have called themselves men of honour, that would have been a disgrace to a gibbet. In a word, the man who sacrifices any duty of a reasonable creature to a prevailing mode or fashion, who looks upon any thing as honourable that is displeasing to his Maker, or destructive to society, who thinks himself obliged by this principle to the practice of some virtues and not of others, is by no means to be reckoned among true men of honour.

Timogenes was a lively instance of one actuated by false honour. Timogenes would smile at a man's jest who ridiculed his Maker, and at the same time, run a man through the body that spoke ill of his friend. Timogenes would have scorned to have betrayed a secret, that ~~was~~ intrusted with him, tho' the fate of his country depended upon the discovery of it. Timogenes took away the life of a young fellow in a duel, for having spoken ill of Belinda, a lady whom he himself had seduced in her youth, and betrayed into want and ignominy. To close his character, Timogenes, after having ruined several poor tradesmen's families, who had trusted him, sold his estate to satisfy his creditors; but like a man of honour, disposed of all the money he could make of it, in the paying off his play debts, or to speak in his own language, his debts of honour.
that

In the third place, we are to consider those persons, who treat this principle as chimerical, and turn it into ridicule. Men who are professedly of no honour, are of a more profligate and abandoned nature than even those who are actuated by false notions of it, as there is more hopes of a heretick than of an atheist. These Sons of infamy consider honour with old Syphax, in the play before-mentioned, as a fine imaginary notion that leads astray young unexperienced men, and draws them into real mischiefs, while they are engaged in the pursuits of a shadow. These are generally persons who, in Shakespear's phrase, "are worn and hackneyed in the ways of men;" whose imaginations are grown callous, and have lost all those delicate sentiments which are natural to minds that are innocent and undepraved. Such old battered miscreants ridicule every thing as romantick that comes in competition with their present interest, and treat those persons as visionaries, who dare stand up in a corrupt age, for what has not its immediate reward joined to it. The talents, interest, or experience of such men, make them very often useful in all parties, and at all times. But whatever wealth and dignities they may arrive at, they ought to consider, that every one stands as a blot in the annals of his country who arrives at the temple of honour by any other way than through that of virtue.

N^o 162 Wednesday, September 16.

Proprium hoc esse prudentiæ, consiliare sibi animos hominum, & ad usus suos adjungere. CICERO.

The art of prudence lies in gaining the esteem of the world, and turning it to a man's own advantage.

I Was the other day in company at my lady Lizard's, when there came in among us their cousin Tom, who is one of those country squires that set up for plain honest gentlemen who speak their minds. Tom is in short a lively impudent clown, and has wit enough to have made him a pleasant companion, had it been polished and rectified by good-manners. Tom had not been a quarter of an hour with us, before he set every one in the company a blushing, by some blunt question, or unlucky observation. He asked the sparkler if her wit had yet got her a husband; and told her eldest sister she looked a little wan under the eyes, and that it was time for her to look about her, if she did not design to lead apes in the other world. The good lady Lizard, who suffers more than her daughters on such an occasion, desired her cousin Thomas with a smile, not to be so severe on his relations; to which the booby replied, with a rude country laugh, If I be not mistaken, aunt, you were a mother at fifteen, and why do you expect, that your daughters should be maids till five and twenty! I endeavoured to divert the discourse; when without taking notice of what I said, Mr. IRONSIDE, says he, you fill my cousins heads with your fine notions, as you call them; can you teach them to make a pudding? I must confess he put me out of countenance with his rustick rallery, so that I made some excuse, and left the room.

This fellow's behaviour made me reflect on the usefulness of complaisance, to make all conversation agreeable. This, though in itself it be scarce reckoned in the number of moral virtues, is that which gives a lustre to every talent a man can be possess of. It was Plato's advice to an unpolished writer, that he should sacrifice to the Graces. In the same manner I would advise every man of learning, who would not appear in the world a mere scholar, or philosopher, to make himself master of the social virtue which I have here mentioned.
the

Complaisance renders a superior amiable, an equal agreeable, and an inferior acceptable. It smooths distinction, sweetens conversation, and makes every one in the company pleased with himself. It produces good-nature and mutual benevolence, encourages the timorous, soothes the turbulent, humanises the fierce, and distinguishes a society of civilized persons from a confusion of savages. In a word, complaisance is a virtue that blends all orders of men together in a friendly intercourse of words and actions, and is suited to that equality in human nature which every one ought to consider, so far as is consistent with the order and œconomy of the world.

If we could look into the secret anguish and affliction of every man's heart, we should often find that more of it arises from little imaginary distresses, such as checks, frowns, contradictions, expressions of contempt, and (what Shakespear reckons among other evils under the sun)

—The poor man's contumely,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes, than from the more real pains and calamities of life. The only method to remove these imaginary distresses as much as possible out of human life, would be the universal practice of such an ingenuous complaisance, as I have been here describing, which, as it is a virtue, may be defined to be, "A constant endeavour to please those whom we converse with, so far as we may do it innocently." I shall here add, that I know nothing so effectual to raise a man's fortune as complaisance; which recommends more to the favour of the great, than wit, knowledge, or any other talent whatsoever. I find this consideration very prettily illustrated by a little wild wild Arabian tale which I shall here abridge, for the sake of my reader, after having again warned him, that I do not recommend to him such an impertinent or vicious complaisance as is not consistent with honour and integrity.

‘ Schacabac, being reduced to great poverty, and ‘ having eat nothing for two days together, made a vi‘ sit to a noble Barmecide in Persia, who was very hos‘ pitable, but withal a great humourist. The Barme‘ cide was sitting at his table that seemed ready covered
‘ for an entertainment. Upon hearing Schacabac’s ‘ complaint, he desired him to sit down and fall on. He ‘ then gave him an empty plate, and asked him how ‘ he liked his rice-soup. Schacabac, who was a man ‘ of wit, and resolved to comply with the Barmecide in ‘ all his humours, told him it was admirable, and at ‘ the same time, in imitation of the other, lifted up the ‘ empty spoon to his mouth with great pleasure. The ‘ Barmecide then asked him if he ever saw whiter
‘ bread? Schacabac, who saw neither bread nor meat,
‘ If I did not like it, you may be sure, says he, I should ‘ not eat so heartily of it. You oblige me mightily, ‘ replied the Barmecide, pray let me help you to this ‘ leg of a goose. Schacabac reached out his plate, and ‘ received nothing on it with great chearfulness. As he ‘ was eating very heartily on this imaginary goose, and ‘ crying up the sauce to the skies, the Barmecide de‘ sired him to keep a corner of his stomach for a roasted ‘ lamb fed with pistacho-nuts, and after having called ‘ for it, as though it had really been served up, Here
‘ is a dish, says he, that you will see at no body’s table
‘ but my own. Schacabac was wonderfully delighted ‘ with the taste of it, which is like nothing, says he, I ‘ ever eat before. Several other nice dishes were served ‘ up in idea, which both of them commended, and ‘ feasted on after the same manner. This was followed ‘ by an invisible desert, no part of which delighted ‘ Schacabac so much as a certain lozenge, which the ‘ Barmecide told him was a sweet-meat of his own in‘ vention. Schacabac at length, being courteously re‘ proached by the Barmecide, that he had no stomach, ‘ and that he eat nothing, and at the same time being tired

‘ tired with moving his jaws up and down to no pur‘ pose, desired to be excused, for that really he was so ‘ full he could not eat a bit more. Come then, says
‘ the Barmecide, the cloth shall be removed, and you ‘ shall taste of my wines, which I may say, without va‘ nity, are the best in Persia. He then filled both their ‘ glasses out of an empty decanter. Schacabac would ‘ have excused himself from drinking so much at once, ‘ because he said he was a little quarrelsome in his ‘ liquor; however being pressed to it, he pretended to ‘ take it off, having before-hand praised the colour,
‘ and afterwards the flavour. Being plied with two or ‘ three other imaginary bumpers of different wines,
‘ equally delicious, and a little vexed with this fantas-‘ tick treat, he pretended to grow flustered, and gave ‘ the Barmecide a good box on the ear, but immedi‘ ately recovering himself, Sir, says he, I beg ten thou‘ sand pardons, but I told you before, that it was my ‘ misfortune to be quarrelsome in my drink. The Bar-‘ mecide could not but smile at the humour of his guest,
‘ and instead of being angry at him, I find, says he,
‘ thou art a complaisant fellow, and deservest to be en‘ tertained in my house. Since thou canst accommodate ‘ thyself to my humour, we will now eat together in ‘ good earnest. Upon which calling for his supper,
‘ the rice-soup, the goose, the pistacho-lamb, the several ‘ other nice dishes, with the desert, the lozenges, and all ‘ the variety of Persian wines were served up successive‘ ly, one after another; and Schacabac was feasted in ‘ reality, with those very things which he had before ‘ been entertained with in imagination.

N^o 163 Thursday, September 17.—miserum est alienâ vivere quadrâ.

Juv. Sat. 5. v. 2.

How wretched he, by cruel fortune crost,
Who never dines, but at another's cost.

WHEN I am disposed to give myself a day's rest, I order the Lion to be opened, and search into that magazine of intelligence for such letters as are to my purpose. The first I looked into comes to me from one who is Chaplain to a great family. He treats himself in the beginning of it, after such a manner, as I am persuaded no man of sense would treat him. Even the Lawyer and the Physician, to a Man of Quality, expect to be used like Gentlemen, and much more may any one of so superior a profession. I am by no means for encouraging that dispute, whether the Chaplain or the Master of the house be the better man, and the more to be respected. The two learned authors, doctor Hicks, and Mr. Collier, to whom I might add several others, are to be excused, if they have carried the point a little too high in favour of the Chaplain, since in so corrupt an age as that we live in, the popular opinion runs so far into the other extreme. The only controversy, between the Patron and the Chaplain, ought to be which should promote the good designs and interests of each other most, and for my own part, I think it is the happiest circumstance in a great estate or title, that it qualifies a man for choosing out of such a learned and valuable body of men as that of the English clergy, a friend, a spiritual guide, and a companion. The letter I have received, from one of this order, is as follows.

Mr. GUARDIAN,

‘ I Hope you will not only indulge me in the liberty
‘ of two or three questions, but also in the solution
‘ of them.

VOL. II.

O

‘ I have

‘ I have had the honour, many years of being Chap‘ lain to a Noble Family, and of being accounted the ‘ highest servant in the house, either out of respect to ‘ my cloth, or because I lie in the uppermost garret.

‘ Whilst my old Lord lived, his table was always ‘ adorned with useful learning and innocent mirth, as ‘ well as covered with plenty. I was not looked upon
‘ as a piece of furniture fit only to sanctify and garnish
‘ a feast, but treated as a gentleman, and generally de‘ fired to fill up the conversation an hour after I had ‘ done my duty. But now my young Lord is come ‘ to the estate, I find I am looked upon as a censor ‘ morum, an obstacle to mirth and talk, and suffered
‘ to retire constantly with “ Prosperity to the church ”
‘ in my mouth. I declare solemnly, Sir, that I have ‘ heard nothing, from all the Fine Gentlemen who visit ‘ us, more remarkable for half a year, than that one ‘ young Lord was seven-times drunk at Genoa, and ‘ another had an affair with a famous courtesan at ‘ Venice. I have lately taken the liberty to stay three ‘ or four rounds beyond the church, to see what to-‘ picks of discourse they went upon, but to my great ‘ surprise, have hardly heard a word all the time be‘ sides the toasts. Then they all stare full in my face,
‘ and shew all the actions of uneasiness till I am gone.
‘ Immediately upon my departure, to use the words in ‘ an old comedy, “ I find by the noise they make, that ‘ they had a mind to be private.” I am at a loss to ‘ imagine what conversation they have among one ‘ another, which I may not be present at; since I love ‘ innocent mirth as much as any of them, and am ‘ shocked with no freedoms whatsoever, which are con‘ sistent with christianity. I have, with much ado, ‘ maintained my post hitherto at the desert, and every ‘ day eat tart in the face of my patron; but how ‘ long I shall be invested with this privilege I do not ‘ know. For the servants, who do not see me sup‘ ported as I was in my old Lord’s time, begin to ‘ brush very familiarly by me, and thrust aside my ‘ chair, when they set the sweet meats on the table.
‘ I have been born and educated a Gentleman, and ‘ desire you will make the publick, sensible, that the Christian Priesthood was never thought in any age or country to debase the man who is a member of it. Among the great services which your useful papers daily do to religion, this perhaps will not be the least, and will lay a very great obligation on your unknown servant,

G. W.

Venerable NESTOR,

I Was very much pleased with your paper of the 7th instant, in which you recommend the study of useful knowledge to women of quality or fortune. I have since that met with a very elegant poem, written by the famous Sir Thomas More. It is inscribed to a friend of his who was then seeking out a wife; he advises him on that occasion to overlook wealth and beauty, and if he desires a happy life, to join himself with a woman of virtue and knowledge. His words on this last head are as follow.

*Proculque stulta sit,
Parvis labellulis,
Semper loquacitas;
Proculque rusticum
Semper silentium.
Sit illa, vel modò
Instructa literis;
Vel talis, ut modò
Sit apta literis,
Felix quævis bene
Priscis ab omnibus
Possit libellulis
Vitam beantia
Haurire dogmata:
Armata cum quibus,
Nec illa prosperis
Superba turgeat;
Nec illa turbidis
Miscella lugeat,
Prostrata casibus.
Fecunda sic erit
Semper, nec unquam erit*

*Gravis, molestave
Vitæ comes tuæ;
Quæ docta parvulos
Docebit & tuos
Cum lacte literas
Olim nepotulos.
Jam te juvaverit
Viros relinquere,
Doctæque conjugis
Sinu quiescere:
Dum grata te fovet;
Manûque mobili
Dum plectra personat;
Et voce (quâ nec est,
Progne, sororculæ
Tuæ suavior)
Amæna cantillat,
Apollo quæ velit
Audire carmina.
Jam te juvaverit
Sermone blandulo,
Docto tamen, dies*

*Noctesque ducere;
 Notare verbula
 Mellita, maximis
 Non absque gratiis,
 Ab ore melleo
 Semper fluentia:
 Quibus coerceat,
 Si quando te levet
 Inane gaudium;
 Quibus levaverit,
 Si quando deprimat
 Te mœror anxius.
 Certabit in quibus
 Summa eloquentia,
 Jam cum omnium gravi
 Rerum scientia.
 Talem olim ego putem
 Et vatis Orphei
 Fuisse conjugem;
 Nec unquam ab inferis*

*Curâset, improbo
 Labore, fœminam
 Referre rusticam:
 Talemque credimus
 Nasonis inclytam,
 Quæ vel patrem queat
 Aquare carmine,
 Fuisse filiam;
 Talemque suspicor
 (Quâ nulla charior
 Unquam fuit patri,
 Quo nemo doctior)
 Fuisse Tulliam:
 Talisque, quæ tulit
 Gracchos duos, fuit;
 Quæ quos tulit, bonis
 Instruxit artibus;
 Nec profuit minus
 Magistra, quam parens.*

The sense of this elegant description is as follows.

‘ May you meet with a wife who is not always ‘ stupidly silent, not always prattling nonsense! May ‘ she be learned, if possible, or at least capable of being ‘ made so! A woman thus accomplished will be always ‘ drawing sentences and maxims of virtue out of the ‘ best authors of antiquity. She will be herself in all ‘ changes of fortune, neither blown up in prosperity, ‘ nor broken with adversity. You will find in her an ‘ even, chearful, good-humoured friend, and an agree‘ able companion for life. She will infuse knowledge ‘ into your children with their milk, and from their in‘ fancy train them up to wisdom. Whatever company
 ‘ you are engaged in you will long to be at home, and ‘ retire with delight from the society of men into the ‘ bosom of one who is so dear, so knowing and so ami‘ able. If she touches her lute, or sings to it any of ‘ her own compositions, her voice will sooth you in ‘ your solitudes, and sound more sweetly in your ear ‘ than that of the nightingale. You will waste with ‘ pleasure whole days and nights in her conversation,
 ‘ and

‘ and be ever finding out new beauties in her discourse.
 ‘ She will keep your mind in perpetual serenity, restrain
 ‘ its mirth from being dissolute, and prevent its melan‘ choly from being painful.

‘ Such was doubtless the wife of Orpheus, for who ‘ would have undergone what he did to have recovered
 ‘ a foolish bride? Such was the daughter of Ovid, who ‘ was his rival in poetry. Such was Tullia as she is cele‘ brated by the most learned and the most fond of fa‘ thers. And such was the mother of the two Gracchi, ‘ who is no less famous for having been their instruc‘ tor, than their parent.

N^o 164 Friday, September 18.

—simili frondescit virga metallo.

Virg, Æn. 6. v. 144.

The same rich metal glitters on the tree.

A N eminent prelate of our church observes that “ there is no way of writing so proper, for the re“ fining and polishing a language, as the translating of “ books into it, if he who undertakes it has a compe“ tent skill of the one tongue, and is a master of the other.
 “ When a man writes his own thoughts, the heat of his “ fancy, and the quickness of his mind, carry him so “ much after the notions themselves, that for the most “ part he is too warm to judge of the aptness of words,
 “ and the justness of figures; so that he either neglects
 “ these too much, or overdoes them: But when a man “ translates, he has none of these heats about him; and “ therefore the French took no ill method, when they “ intended to reform and beautify their language, in “ setting their best writers on work to translate the Greek “ and Latin authors into it.” Thus far this learned prelate.

And another lately deceased, tells us, that “ the way “ of leaving verbal translations, and chiefly regarding
 “ the sense and genius of the author, was scarce heard

“ of in England before this present age.” As for the difficulty of translating well, every one, I believe, must allow my lord Roscommon to be in the right, when he says,

’Tis true, composing is the nobler part,
But good translation is no easy art:
For tho’ materials have long since been found,
Yet both your fancy, and your hands are bound;
And by improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgment more.

Dryden judiciously remarks, that “a translator is to make “ his author appear as charming as possibly he can, provided he maintains his character, and makes him not “ unlike himself.” And a too close and servile imitation, which the same poet calls “treading on the heels of an author” is deservedly laughed at by Sir John Denham.
“ I conceive it, says he, a vulgar error in translating “ poets, to affect being fidus interpres: Let that care be “ with them who deal in matters of fact, or matters of “ faith; but whosoever aims at it in poetry, as he attempts what is not required, so shall he never perform “ what he attempts; for it is not his business alone to “ translate language into language, but poesy into “ poesy; and poesy is of so subtle a spirit, that in “ pouring out of one language into another, it will all “ evaporate, and if a new spirit is not added in the “ transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum, there being certain graces and happinesses
“ peculiar to every language, which give life and energy
“ to the words; and whosoever offers at verbal translations, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought “ home no other instead of it. For the grace of the Latin will be lost by being turned into English words,
“ and the grace of the English by being turned into
“ the Latin phrase.”

After this collection of authorities out of some of our greatest English writers. I shall present my reader with a translation, in which the author has conformed himself to the opinion of these great men. The beauty of the translation is sufficient to recommend it to the publick, without acquainting them that the translator is

is Mr. Eusden of Cambridge; who obliged them in the Guardian of August the 6th, with the Court of Venus out of the same Latin poet, which was highly applauded by the best judges in performances of this nature.

The speech of Pluto to Proserpine, from the second book of her Rape, by Claudian.

Cease, cease, fair nymph, to lavish precious tears,
And discompose your soul with airy fears.
Look on Sicilia's glitt'ring courts with scorn;
A nobler scepter shall that hand adorn.
Imperial pomp shall sooth a gen'rous pride;
The bridegroom never will disgrace the bride.
If you above terrestrial thrones aspire,
From heav'n I spring, and Saturn was my fire.
The pow'r of Pluto stretches all around,
Uncircumscrib'd by nature's utmost bound:
Where matter mould'ring dies, where forms decay,
Thro' the vast trackless void extends my sway.
Mark not with mournful eyes the fainting light,
Nor tremble at this interval of night;
A fairer scene shall open to your view,
An earth more verdant, and a heav'n more blue.
Another Phœbus gilds those happy skies,
And other stars, with purer flames, arise.
There chaste adorers shall their praises join,
And with the choicest gifts enrich your shrine.
The blissful climes no change of ages knew,
The golden first began, and still is new.
That golden age your world a while could boast,
But here it flourish'd, and was never lost.
Perpetual zephyrs breathe thro' fragrant bow'rs;
And painted meads smile with unbidden flow'rs:
Flow'rs of immortal bloom and various hue;
No rival sweets in your own Enna grew.
In the recess of a cool sylvan glade
A monarch-tree projects no vulgar shade.
Encumber'd with their wealth, the branches bend,
And golden apples to your reach descend.
Spare not the fruit, but pluck the blooming ore,
The yellow harvest will increase the more.

But I too long on trifling themes explain,
Nor speak th' unbounded glories of your reign.
Whole nature owns your pow'r: Whate'er have birth,
And live, and move o'er all the face of earth;
Or in old ocean's mighty caverns sleep,
Or sportive roll along the foamy deep;
Or on stiff pinnions airy journeys take,
Or cut the floating stream or stagnant lake:
In vain they labour to preserve their breath,
And soon fall victims to your subject, death.
Unnumber'd triumphs swift to you he brings,
Hail! Goddesses of all sublunary things!
Empires, that sink above, here rise again,
And worlds unpeopled crowd th' Elysian plain.
The rich, the poor, the monarch, and the slave,
Know no superior honours in the grave.
Proud tyrants once, and laurel'd chiefs shall come,
And kneel, and trembling wait from you their doom.
The impious, forc'd, shall then their crimes disclose,
And see past pleasures teem with future woes;
Deplore in darkness your impartial sway,
While spotless souls enjoy the fields of day.
When ripe for second birth, the dead shall stand
In shiv'ring throngs on the Lethæan strand,
That shade whom you approve, shall first be brought
To quaff oblivion in the pleasing draught,
Whose thread of life, just spun, you would renew,
But nod, and Clotho shall rewind the clue
Let no distrust of pow'r your joys abate,
Speak what you wish, and what you speak is fate.
The ravisher thus sooth'd the weeping fair,
And check'd the fury of his steeds with care:
Possess of beauty's charms, he calmly rode,
And love first soften'd the relentless God.

N^o 165 Saturday, September 19.

Decipit exemplar, vitiis imitabile—

Hor. Ep. 19. l. 1. v. 17.

Examples, vice can imitate, deceive. CREECH.

IT is a melancholy thing to see a coxcomb at the head of a family. He scatters infection through the whole house. His wife and children have always their eyes upon him: If they have more sense than himself, they are out of countenance for him: If less, they submit their understandings to him, and make daily improvements in folly and impertinence. I have been very often secretly concerned, when I have seen a circle of pretty children cramped in their natural parts, and prattling even below themselves, while they are talking after a couple of silly parents. The dulness of a father often extinguishes a genius in the son, or gives such a wrong cast to his mind, as it is hard for him ever to wear off. In short, where the head of a family is weak, you hear the repetitions of his insipid pleasantries, shallow conceits, and topical points of mirth, in every member of it. His table, his fire-side, his parties of diversion, are all of them so many standing scenes of folly.

This is one reason why I would the more recommend the improvements of the mind to my female readers, that a family may have a double chance for it; and if it meets with weakness in one of the heads, may have it made up in the other. It is indeed an unhappy circumstance in a family, where the wife has more knowledge than the husband; but it is better it should be so, than that there should be no knowledge in the whole house. It is highly expedient that at least one of the persons, who sits at the helm of affairs, should give an example of good sense to those who are under them in these little domestick governments.

If folly is of ill consequence in the head of a family, vice is much more so, as it is of a more pernicious and of a more contagious nature. When the master is a profligate, the rake runs through the house. You hear the sons talking loosely and swearing after the father, and see the daughters either familiarized to his discourse, or every moment blushing for him.

The very footman will be a fine gentleman in his master's way. He improves by his table-talk, and repeats in the kitchen what he learns in the parlour. Invest him with the same title and ornaments, and you would scarce know him from his lord. He practises the same oaths, the same ribaldry, the same way of joking.

It is therefore of very great concern to a family, that the ruler of it should be wise and virtuous. The first of these qualifications does not indeed lie within his power; but tho' a man cannot abstain from being weak, he may from being vicious. It is in his power to give a good example of modesty, of temperance, of frugality, of religion, and of all other virtues, which though the greatest ornaments of human nature, may be put in practice by men of the most ordinary capacities.

As wisdom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house, if he is not accomplished in both of them, it is much better that he should be deficient in the former than in the latter, since the consequences of vice are of an infinitely more dangerous nature than those of folly.

When I read the histories that are left us of Pythagoras, I cannot but take notice of the extraordinary influence which that great philosopher, who was an illustrious pattern of virtue and wisdom, had on his private family. This excellent man, after having perfected himself in the learning of his own country, travelled into all the known parts of the world, on purpose to converse with the most learned men of every place; by which means he gleaned up all the knowledge of the age, and is still admired by the greatest men of the present times, as a prodigy of science. His wife Theano wrote several books; and after his death death taught his philosophy in his publick school, which was frequented by numberless disciples of different countries. There are several excellent sayings recorded of her. I shall only mention one, because it does honour to her virtue, as well as to her wisdom. Being asked by some of her sex, in how long a time a woman might be allowed to pray to the gods, after having conversed with a man? "If it were her husband," says she, "the next day; if a stranger, never." Pythagoras had by this wife two sons and three daughters. His two sons, Telauges and Mnesarchus, were both eminent philosophers, and were joined with their mother in the government of the Pythagorean school. Arignote was one of the daughters, whose writings were extant, and very much admired, in the age of Porphyrius. Damo was another of his daughters, in whose hands Pythagoras left his works, with a prohibition to communicate them to strangers, which she observed to the hazard of her life; and though she was offered a great sum for them, rather chose to live in poverty, than not obey the commands of her beloved father. Mila was the third of the daughters, whose works and history were very famous, even in Lucian's time. She was so signally virtuous, that for her unblemished behaviour in her virginity, she was chosen to lead up the chorus of maids in a national solemnity; and for her exemplary conduct in marriage, was placed at the head of all the matrons, in the like publick ceremony. The memory of this learned woman was so precious among her countrymen, that her house was after her death converted into a temple, and the street she lived in called by the name of the Musæum. Nor must I omit, whilst I am mentioning this great philosopher, under his character as the master of a family; that two of his servants so improved themselves under him, that they were instituted into his sect, and make an eminent figure in the list of Pythagoreans. The names of these two servants were Amraeus and Zamolxes. This single example sufficiently shews us both the influence and the merit of one who discharges as he ought the office of a good master of a family; which, if it were well observed served in every house, would quickly put an end to that universal depravation of manners, by which the present age is so much distinguished; and which it is more easy to lament than to reform.

N^o 166 Monday, September 21.

---aliquisque malo fuit usus in illo.

Ovid. Met. l. 2. v. 332.

Some comfort from the mighty mischief rose.

ADDISON.

CHARITY is a virtue of the heart, and not of the hands, says an old writer. Gifts and alms are the expressions, not the essence of this virtue. A man may bestow great sums on the poor and indigent without being charitable, and may be charitable, when he is not able to bestow any thing. Charity is therefore a habit of good-will, or benevolence, in the soul, which disposes us to the love, assistance, and relief of mankind, especially of those who stand in need of it. The poor man who has this excellent frame of mind, is no less intitled to the reward of this virtue than the man who founds a college. For my own part, I am charitable to an extravagance this way. I never saw an indigent person in my life, without reaching out to him some of this imaginary relief. I cannot but sympathise with every one I meet that is in affliction; and if my abilities were equal to my wishes, there should be neither pain nor poverty in the world.

To give my reader a right notion of myself in this particular, I shall present him with the secret history of one of the most remarkable parts of my life.

I was once engaged in search of the philosophers stone. It is frequently observed of men who have been busied

busied in this pursuit, that though they have failed in their principal design, they have however made such discoveries in their way to it, as have sufficiently recompensed their inquiries. In the same manner, though I cannot boast of my success in that affair, I do not repent of my engaging in it, because it produced in my mind such an habitual exercise of charity, as made it much better than perhaps it would have been, had I never been lost in so pleasing a delusion.

As I did not question but I should soon have a new Indies in my possession, I was perpetually taken up in considering how to turn it to the benefit of mankind. In order to it I employed a whole day in walking about this great city, to find out proper places for the erection of hospitals. I had likewise entertained that project, which has since succeeded in another place, of building churches at the court-end of the town, with this only difference, that instead of fifty, I intended to have built a hundred, and to have seen them all finished in less than one year.

I had with great pains and application got together a list of all the French protestants; and by the best accounts I could come at, had calculated the value of all those estates and effects which every one of them had left in his own country for the sake of his religion, being fully determined to make it up to him, and return some of them the double of what they had lost.

As I was one day in my laboratory, my operator, who was to fill my coffers for me, and used to foot it from the other end of the town every morning, complained of a sprain in his leg, that he had met with over-against St. Clement's church. This so affected me, that as a standing mark of my gratitude to him, and out of compassion to the rest of my fellow citizens, I resolved to new-pave every street within the liberties, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly. About the same time I entertained some thoughts of mending all the high-ways on this side the Tweed, and of making all the rivers in England navigable.

But the project I had most at heart was the settling upon every man in Great-Britain three pounds a year (in

(in which sum may be comprised, according to Sir William Pettit's observations, all the necessities of life) leaving to them whatever else they could get by their own industry to lay out on superfluities.

I was above a week debating in myself what I should do in the matter of Impropropriations; but at length came to a resolution to buy them all up, and restore them to the church.

As I was one day walking near St. Paul's, I took some time to survey that structure, and not being intirely satisfied with it, though I could not tell why, I had some thoughts of pulling it down, and building it up anew at my own expence.

For my own part, as I have no pride in me, I intended to take up with a coach and six, half a dozen footmen, and live like a private gentleman.

It happened about this time that publick matters looked very gloomy, taxes came hard, the war went on heavily, people complained of the great burdens that were laid upon them: This made me resolve to set aside one morning, to consider seriously the state of the nation. I was the more ready to enter on it, because I was obliged, whether I would or no, to sit at home in my morning-gown, having, after a most incredible expence, pawned a new suit of clothes, and a full-bottomed whig, for a sum of money, which my operator assured me was the last he should want to bring all our matters to bear. After having considered many projects, I at length resolved to beat the common enemy at his own weapons, and laid a scheme which would have blown him up in a quarter of a year, had things succeeded to my wishes. As I was in this golden dream, some body knocked at my door. I opened it, and found it was a messenger that brought me a letter from the laboratory. The fellow looked so miserably poor, that I was resolved to make his fortune before he delivered his message: But seeing he brought a letter from my operator, I concluded I was bound to it in honour, as much as a prince is to give a reward to one that brings him the first news of a victory. I knew this was the long expected hour of projection, and which

which I had waited for with great impatience, above half a year before. In short, I broke open my letter in a transport of joy, and found it as follows.

S I R,

‘ After having got out of you every thing you can ‘ conveniently spare, I scorn to trespass upon your ‘ generous nature, and therefore must ingenuously con‘ fess to you, that I know no more of the philosophers
‘ stone than you do. I shall only tell you for your com‘ fort, that I could never yet bubble a blockhead out ‘ of his money. They must be men of wit and parts
‘ who are for my purpose. This made me apply my‘ self to a person of your wealth and ingenuity. How ‘ I have succeeded you yourself can best tell.’

Your humble servant to command,

THOMAS WHITE.

I have locked up the laboratory, and laid the key under the door.

I was very much shocked at the unworthy treatment of this man, and not a little mortified at my disappointment, though not so much for what I myself, as what the publick suffered by it. I think however I ought to let the world know what I designed for them, and hope that such of my readers who find they had a share in my good intentions, will accept of the will for the deed.

Tuesday,

N^o 167 Tuesday, September 22.

Fata viam invenient—

Virg. Æn. 3. v. 395.

—Fate the way will find.

DRYDEN,

THE following story is lately translated out of an Arabian manuscript, which I think has very much the turn of an oriental tale; and as it has never before been printed, I question not but it will be highly acceptable to my reader.

The name of Helim is still famous through all the eastern parts of the world. He is called among the Persians, even to this day, Helim the great physician. He was acquainted with all the powers of simples, understood all the influences of the stars, and knew the secrets that were engraved on the seal of Solomon the son of David. Helim was also governor of the Black Palace, and chief of the physicians to Alnareschin the great king of Persia.

Alnareschin was the most dreadful tyrant that ever reigned in this country. He was of a fearful, suspicious, and cruel nature, having put to death upon very slight jealousies and surmises five and thirty of his queens, and above twenty sons whom he suspected to have conspired against his life. Being at length wearied with the exercise of so many cruelties in his own family, and fearing lest the whole race of Caliphs should be entirely lost, he one day sent for Helim, and spoke to him after this manner. “Helim,” said he, “I have long admired “thy great wisdom, and retired way of living. I “shall now shew thee the entire confidence which I place “in thee. I have only two sons remaining, who are “as yet but infants. It is my design that thou take “them home with thee, and educate them as thy “own. Train them up in the humble unambitious pur“suits of knowledge. By this means shall the line of “Caliphs

“ Caliphs be preserved, and my children succeed after “ me, without aspiring to my throne whilst I am yet “ alive.” The words of my lord the king shall be obeyed, said Helim. After which he bowed, and went out of the king’s presence. He then received the children into his own house, and from that time bred them up with him in the studies of knowledge and virtue.
 The young princes loved and respected Helim as their father, and made such improvements under him, that by the age of one and twenty they were instructed in all the learning of the East. The name of the eldest was Ibrahim, and of the youngest Abdallah. They lived together in such a perfect friendship, that to this day it is said of intimate friends, that they live together like Ibrahim and Abdallah. Helim had an only child, who was a girl of a fine soul, and a most beautiful person.
 Her father omitted nothing in her education, that might make her the most accomplished woman of her age.
 As the young princes were in a manner excluded from the rest of the world, they frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in the same course of knowledge and of virtue.
 Abdallah, whose mind was of a softer turn than that of his brother, grew by degrees so enamoured of her conversation, that he did not think he lived, when he was not in company with his beloved Balsora, for that was the name of the maid. The fame of her beauty was so great, that at length it came to the ears of the king, who pretending to visit the young princes his sons, demanded of Helim the sight of Balsora his fair daughter.
 The king was so inflamed with her beauty and behaviour, that he sent for Helim the next morning, and told him it was now his design to recompense him for all his faithful services; and that in order to it, he intended to make his daughter queen of Persia. Helim, who knew very well the fate of all those unhappy women who had been thus advanced, and could not but be privy to the secret love which Abdallah bore his daughter, “ Far be it,” says he, “ from the king of Persia
 “ to contaminate the blood of the Caliphs, and join “ himself in marriage with the daughter of his physi“ cian.”

“ cian.” The king however, was so impatient for such a bride, that without hearing any excuses, he immediately ordered Balfora to be sent for into his presence, keeping the father with him, in order to make her sensible of the honour which he designed her. Balfora, who was too modest and humble to think her beauty had made such an impression on the king, was a few moments after brought into his presence as he had commanded.

She appeared in the king's eye as one of the virgins of paradise. But upon hearing the honour which he intended her, she fainted away, and fell down as dead at his feet. Helim wept, and after having recovered her out of the trance into which she was fallen, represented to the king, that so unexpected an honour was too great to have been communicated to her all at once; but that, if he pleased, he would himself prepare her for it. The king bid him take his own way, and dismissed him. Balfora was conveyed again to her father's house, where the thoughts of Abdallah renewed her affliction every moment; insomuch that at length she fell into a raging fever. The king was informed of her condition by those that saw her. Helim finding no other means of extricating her from the difficulties she was in, after having composed her mind, and made her acquainted with his intentions, gave her a certain potion, which he knew would lay her asleep for many hours; and afterwards in all the seeming distress of a disconsolate father informed the king she was dead. The king, who never let any sentiments of humanity come too near his heart, did not much trouble himself about the matter; however, for his own reputation, he told the father, that since it was known through the empire that Balfora died at a time when he designed her for his bride, it was his intention that she should be honoured as such after her death, that her body should be laid in the Black Palace, among those of his deceased queens.

In the mean time Abdallah, who had heard of the king's design, was not less afflicted than his beloved Balfora. As for the several circumstances of his distress, as also how the king was informed of an irrecoverable coverable distemper into which he was fallen, they are to be found at length in the history of Helim. It shall suffice to acquaint the reader, that Helim, some days after the supposed death of his daughter, gave the prince a potion of the same nature with that which had laid asleep Balsora.

It is the custom among the Persians, to convey in a private manner the bodies of all the royal family, a little after their death, into the Black Palace; which is the repository of all who are descended from the Caliphs, or any way allied to them. The chief physician is always governor of the Black Palace; it being his office to embalm and preserve the holy family after they are dead, as well as to take care of them while they are yet living. The Black Palace is so called from the colour of the building, which is all of the finest polished black marble. There are always burning in it five thousand everlasting lamps. It has also a hundred folding doors of ebony, which are each of them watched day and night by a hundred negroes, who are to take care that no body enters, besides the governor.

Helim, after having conveyed the body of his daughter into this repository, and at the appointed time received her out of the sleep into which she was fallen, took care some time after to bring that of Abdallah into the same place. Balsora watched over him till such time the dose he had taken lost its effect. Abdallah was not acquainted with Helim's design when he gave him this sleepy potion. It is impossible to describe the surprise, the joy, the transport he was in at his first awaking. He fancied himself in the retirements of the blest, and that the spirit of his dear Balsora, who he thought was just gone before him, was the first who came to congratulate his arrival. She soon informed him of the place he was in, which, notwithstanding all its horrors, appeared to him more sweet than the bower of Mahomet, in the company of his Balsora.

Helim, who was supposed to be taken up in the embalming of the bodies, visited the place very frequently. His greatest perplexity was how to get the lovers out of it, the gates being watched in such a manner manner as I have before related. This consideration did not a little disturb the two interred lovers. At length Helim bethought himself, that the first day of the full moon of the month Tizpa was near at hand. Now it is a received tradition among the Persians, that the souls of those of the royal family, who are in a state of bliss, do, on the first full moon after their decease, pass through the eastern gate of the Black Palace, which is therefore called the gate of paradise, in order to take their flight for that happy place. Helim therefore having made due preparation for this night, dressed each of the lovers in a robe of azure silk, wrought in the finest looms of Persia, with a long train of linen whiter than snow, that floated on the ground behind them. Upon Abdalla's head he fixed a wreath of the greenest myrtle, and on Balsora's a garland of the freshest roses. Their garments were scented with the richest perfumes of Arabia. Having thus prepared every thing, the full moon was no sooner up, and shining in all its brightness, but he privately opened the gate of paradise, and shut it after the same manner, as soon as they had passed through it. The band of negroes who were posted at a little distance from the gate, seeing two such beautiful apparitions, that showed themselves to advantage by the light of the full moon, and being ravished with the odour that flowed from their garments, immediately concluded them to be the ghosts of the two persons lately deceased. They fell upon their faces as they passed through the midst of them, and continued prostrate on the earth until such time as they were out of sight. They reported the next day what they had seen, but this was looked upon by the king himself, and most others, as the compliment that was usually paid to any of the deceased of his family. Helim had placed two of his own mules at about a mile's distance from the Black Temple, on the spot which they had agreed upon for their rendezvous. Here he met them, and conducted them to one of his own houses, which was situated on mount Khacan. The air of this mountain was so very healthful, that Helim had formerly transported the king thither,

thither, in order to recover him out of a long fit of sickness; which succeeded so well that the king made him a present of the whole mountain, with a beautiful house and gardens that were on the top of it. In this retirement lived Abdallah and Balfora. They were both so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with so constant and mutual a passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them. Abdallah applied himself to those arts which were agreeable to his manner of living, and the situation of the place; insomuch that in a few years he converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers. Helim was too good a father to let him want any thing that might conduce to make his retirement pleasant.

In about ten years after their abode in this place the old king died, and was succeeded by his son Ibrahim, who, upon the supposed death of his brother, had been called to court, and entertained there as heir to the Persian empire. Though he was some years inconsolable for the death of his brother, Helim durst not trust him with the secret, which he knew would have fatal consequences, should it by any means come to the knowledge of the old king. Ibrahim was no sooner mounted to the throne, but Helim sought after a proper opportunity of making a discovery to him, which he knew would be very agreeable to so good-natured and generous a prince. It so happened, that before Helim found such an opportunity as he desired, the new king Ibrahim, having been separated from his company in a chase, and almost fainting with heat and thirst, saw himself at the foot of mount Khacan. He immediately ascended the hill, and coming to Helim's house demanded some refreshments. Helim was very luckily there at that time; and after having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, finding him wonderfully pleased with so seasonable a treat, told him that the best part of his entertainment was to come. Upon which he opened to him the whole history of what had passed. The king was at once astonished and transported at so strange a relation, and seeing his brother enter the room with Balfora in his hand, he leaped off

off from the Sofa on which he sat, and cried out, "It is he! it is my Abdallah!" having said this, he fell upon his neck, and wept. The whole company, for some time, remained silent, and shedding tears of joy. The king at length, having kindly reproached Helim for depriving him so long of such a brother, embraced Balsora with the greatest tenderness, and told her that she should now be a queen indeed, for that he would immediately make his brother king of all the conquered nations on the other side the Tigris. He easily discovered in the eyes of our two lovers, that instead of being transported with the offer, they preferred their present retirement to empire. At their request therefore he changed his intentions, and made them a present of all the open country as far as they could see from the top of mount Khacan. Abdallah continuing to extend his former improvements, beautified this whole prospect with groves and fountains, gardens and seats of pleasure, until it became the most delicious spot of ground within the empire, and is therefore called the garden of Persia. This Caliph, Ibrahim, after a long and happy reign, died without children, and was succeeded by Abdallah, a son of Abdallah and Balsora. This was that king Abdallah, who afterwards fixed the imperial residence upon mount Khacan, which continues at this time to be the favourite palace of the Persian empire.

N^o 168 Wednesday, September 23.

— loca jam recitata revolvimus —

Hor. Ep. 1. l. 2. v. 223.

The same subjects we repeat.

S I R,

‘ I Observe that many of your late papers have ‘ represented to us the characters of accomplished
 ‘ women; but among all of them I do not find a ‘ quotation which I expected to have seen in your ‘ works :

works: I mean the character of the mistress of a family as it is drawn out at length in the book of Proverbs. For my part, considering it only as a human composition, I do not think that there is any character in Theophrastus, which has so many beautiful particulars in it, and which is drawn with such elegance of thought and phrase. I wonder that it is not written in letters of gold in the great hall of every country gentleman.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil.

She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life.

She seeketh wool and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands.

She is like the merchants ships, she bringeth her food from afar.

She riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens.

She considereth a field, and buyeth it; with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

She perceiveth that her merchandise is good; her candle goeth not out by night.

She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

She is not afraid of the snow for her household, for all her household are clothed with scarlet.

She maketh herself coverings of tapestry, her clothing is silk and purple.

Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

She maketh fine linen, and selleth it, and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

Strength and honour are her clothing, and she shall rejoice in time to come.

She

‘ She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her ‘ tongue is the law of kindness.

‘ She looketh well to the ways of her household, and ‘ eateth not the bread of idleness.

‘ Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her ‘ husband also, and he praiseth her.

‘ Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou ‘ excellest them all.

‘ Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain, but a wo‘ man that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.

‘ Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own ‘ works praise her in the gates.

Your humble servant.

S I R,

‘ I Ventured to your Lion with the following lines, ‘ upon an assurance, that if you thought them not ‘ proper food for your beast, you would at least permit
‘ him to tear them.

From Anacreon.

Ἄγε ζωγράφων ἀρίστε, &c.

BEST and happiest artisan,
Best of painters, if you can
With your many-coloured art
Paint the mistress of my heart:
Describe the charms you hear from me,
(Her charms you could not paint and see)
And make the absent nymph appear,
As if her lovely self was here.
First draw her easy flowing hair
As soft and black as she is fair;
And if your art can rise so high,
Let breathing odours round her fly:
Beneath the shade of flowing jet
The iv’ry forehead smoothly set.
With care the sable brows extend,
And in two arches nicely bend;
That the fair space, which lies between
The melting shade, may scarce be seen.

The

The eye must be uncommon fire ;
 Sparkle, languish and desire :
 The flames unseen must yet be felt ;
 Like Pallas kill, like Venus melt.
 The rosy cheeks must seem to glow
 Amidst the white of new-fall'n snow.
 Let her lips persuasion wear,
 In silence elegantly fair ;
 As if the blushing rivals strove,
 Breathing and inviting love.
 Below her chin be sure to deck
 With ev'ry grace her polish'd neck ;
 While all that's pretty, soft and sweet,
 In the swelling bosom meet.
 The rest in purple garments veil ;
 Her body, not her shape conceal ;
 Enough—the lovely work is done,
 The breathing paint will speak anon.

I am, S I R,

your humble servant.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

‘ THE letter which I sent you some time ago, and ‘ was subscribed English Tory, has made, as you ‘ must have observed, a very great bustle in town.
 ‘ There are come out against me two Pamphlets and two ‘ Examiners ; but there are printed on my side a letter ‘ to the GUARDIAN about Dunkirk, and a Pamphlet ‘ called Dunkirk or Dover. I am no proper judge who ‘ has the better of the argument, the Examiner or my‘ self: But I am sure my seconds are better than his. I ‘ have addressed a defence against the ill treatment I ‘ have received for my letter, (which ought to have ‘ made every man in England my friend) to the bai‘ liff of Stockbridge, because, as the world goes, I am
 ‘ to think myself very much obliged to that honest man,
 ‘ and esteem him my patron, who allowed that fifty was ‘ a greater number than one and twenty, and returned ‘ me accordingly to serve for that borough.

‘ There are very many scurrilous things said against ‘ me, but I have turned them to my advantage, by ‘ quoting them at large, and by that means swelling the ‘ volume to 1s. price. If I may be so free with my‘ self, I might put you in mind upon this occasion of ‘ one of those animals which are famous for their love

 ‘ of mankind, that when a bone is thrown at them, ‘ fall to eating it, instead of flying at the person who ‘ threw it. Please to read the account of the channel,
 ‘ by the map at Will’s, and you will find what I re‘ present concerning the importance of Dunkirk, as to ‘ its situation, very just.

I am, S I R,

very often your great admirer,

RICHARD STEELE.

N^o 169 Thursday, September 24.

—Cælumque tueri

Jussit—

Ovid. Met. l. 1. v. 85.

And bade him lift to heav’n his wond’ring eyes.

IN fair weather, when my heart is cheered, and I feel that exaltation of spirits which results from light and warmth, joined with a beautiful prospect of nature; I regard myself as one placed by the hand of God in the midst of an ample theatre, in which the sun, moon and stars, the fruits also, and vegetables of the earth, perpetually changing their positions, or their aspects, exhibit an elegant entertainment to the understanding, as well as to the eye.

Thunder and lightning, rain and hail, the painted bow, and the glaring comets, are decorations of this mighty theatre. And the fable hemisphere studded with spangles, the blue vault at noon, the glorious gildings and rich colours in the horizon, I look on as so many successive scenes.

When I consider things in this light, methinks it is a sort of impiety to have no attention to the course of nature, and the revolutions of the heavenly bodies. To be regardless of those phænomena that are placed within our view, on purpose to entertain our faculties, and display the wisdom and power of their Creator, is an affront to Providence of the same kind, (I hope it is not impious to make such a simile) as it would be to a good poet, to fit out his play without minding the plot or beauties of it.

And yet how few are there who attend to the drama of nature, its artificial structure, and those admirable machines, whereby the passions of a philosopher are gratefully agitated, and his soul affected with the sweet emotions of joy and surprise?

How many fox-hunters and rural squires are to be found in Great Britain, who are ignorant that they have all this while lived on a planet; that the sun is several thousand times bigger than the earth; and that there are other worlds within our view greater and more glorious than our own. Ay, but says some illiterate fellow, I enjoy the world, and leave others to contemplate it. Yes, you eat and drink, and run about upon it, that is, you enjoy it as a brute; but to enjoy it as a rational being, is to know it, to be sensible of its greatness and beauty, to be delighted with its harmony, and by these reflections to obtain just sentiments of the Almighty mind that framed it.

The man who, unembarrassed with vulgar cares, leisurely attends to the flux of things in heaven, and things on earth, and observes the laws by which they are governed, hath secured to himself an easy and convenient seat, where he beholds with pleasure all that passes on the stage of nature, while those about him are, some fast asleep, and others struggling for the highest places, or turning their eyes from the entertainment prepared by Providence, to play at push-pin with one another.

Within this ample circumference of the world, the glorious lights that are hung on high, the meteors in the middle region, the various livery of the earth, and the profusion of good things that distinguish the seasons, yield a prospect which annihilates all human grandeur. But when we have seen frequent returns of the same things, when we have often viewed the heaven and the earth in all their various array, our attention flags, and our admiration ceases. All the art and magnificence in nature, could not make us pleased with the same entertainment, presented a hundred years successively to our view.

I am led into this way of thinking by a question started the other night, viz. Whether it were possible that a man should be weary of a fortunate and healthy course of life? My opinion was, that the bare repetition of the same objects, abstracted from all other inconveniencies, was sufficient to create in our minds a distaste of the world; and that the abhorrence old men have of death, proceeds rather from a distrust of what may follow, than from the prospect of losing any present enjoyments. For (as an ancient author somewhere expresses it) when a man has seen the vicissitudes of night and day, winter and summer, spring and autumn, the returning faces of the several parts of nature, what is there further to detain his fancy here below?

The spectacle indeed is glorious, and may bear viewing several times. But in a very few scenes of revolving years, we feel a satiety of the same images; the mind grows impatient to see the curtain drawn, and behold new scenes disclosed; and the imagination is in this life filled with a confused idea of the next.

Death, considered in this light, is no more than passing from one entertainment to another. If the present objects are grown tiresome and distasteful, it is in order to prepare our minds for a more exquisite relish of those which are fresh and new. If the good things we have hitherto enjoyed are transient, they will be succeeded by those which the inexhaustible power of the Deity will supply to eternal ages. If the pleasures of our present state are blended with pain and uneasiness, our future will consist of sincere unmixed delights. Blessed hope! the thought whereof turns the very imperfections of our nature into occasions of comfort and joy.

But what consolation is left to the man who hath no hope or prospect of these things? View him in that part of life when the natural decay of his faculties concurs with the frequency of the same objects to make him weary of this world, when like a man who hangs upon a precipice, his present situation is uneasy, and the moment that he quits his hold, he is sure of sinking into hell or annihilation.
of

There is not any character so hateful as his who invents racks and tortures for mankind. The Free-Thinkers make it their business to introduce doubts, perplexities and despair into the minds of men, and according to the poet's rule, are most justly punished by their own schemes.

N^o 170 Friday, September 25.

—— Timeo Danaos & dona ferentes.

Virg. Æn. 2. v. 49

I fear your Greeks, with presents in their hands.

Most venerable NESTOR, London, Sept. 22

THE plan laid down in your first paper gives me a title and authority to apply to you, in behalf of the trading world. According to the general scheme you proposed in your said first paper, you have not professed only to entertain men of wit and polite taste, but also to be useful to the trader and the artificer. You cannot do your country greater service than by informing all ranks of men amongst us, that the greatest benefactor to them all is the merchant. The merchant advances the gentleman's rent, gives the artificer food, and supplies the courtier's luxury. But give me leave to say, that neither you, nor all your clan of wits can put together so useful and commodious a treatise for the welfare of your fellow-subjects as that which an eminent merchant of the city has lately written. It is called "General Maxims of trade, particularly applied to the commerce between Great Britain and France." I have made an extract of it, so as to bring it within the compass of your paper, which take as follows.

I. That trade which exports manufactures made of the product of the country, is undoubtedly good; such is the sending abroad our Yorkshire cloth, Colchester bays, Exeter serges, Norwich stuffs, &c. Which being made purely of British wool, as much as those exports amount to, so much is the clear gain of the nation.

II. That trade which helps off the consumption of our superfluities, is also visibly advantageous; as the exporting of allum, copperas, leather, tin, lead, coals, &c. So much as the exported superfluities amount unto, so much also is the clear national profit.

III. The importing of foreign materials to be manufactured at home, especially when the goods, after they are manufactured, are mostly sent abroad, is also, without dispute, very beneficial; as for instance, Spanish wool, which for that reason is exempted from paying any duties.

IV. The importation of foreign materials to be manufactured here, although the manufactured goods are chiefly consumed by us, may be also beneficial; especially when the said materials are procured in exchange for our commodities; as raw-silk, grogram, yarn, and other goods brought from Turkey.

V. Foreign materials, wrought up here into such goods as would otherwise be imported ready manufactured, is a means of saving money to the nation: Such is the importation of hemp, flax, and raw-silk; it is therefore to be wondered at, that these commodities are not exempt from all duties, as well as Spanish wool.

VI. A trade may be called good which exchanges manufactures for manufactures, and commodities for commodities. Germany takes as much in value of our woollen and other goods, as we do of their linen: By this means numbers of people are employed on both sides, to their mutual advantage.

VII. An importation of commodities, bought partly for money and partly for goods, may be of national advantage; if the greatest part of the commodities thus imported, are again exported, as in the case of East-

‘ East-India goods : And generally all imports of goods
‘ which are re-exported, are beneficial to a nation.

‘ VIII. The carrying of goods from one foreign coun‘ try to another, is a profitable article in trade: Our ‘ ships are often thus employed between Portugal, Italy,
‘ and the Levant, and sometimes in the East-Indies.

‘ IX. When there is a necessity to import goods
‘ which a nation cannot be without, although such goods
‘ are chiefly purchased with money, it cannot be account‘ ed a bad trade, as our trade to Norway and other parts,
‘ from whence are imported naval stores and materials
‘ for building.

‘ But a trade is disadvantageous to a nation,

‘ 1. Which brings in things of mere luxury and plea‘ sure, which are entirely, or for the most part, con‘ sumed among us; and such I reckon the wine trade
‘ to be, especially when the wine is purchased with mo‘ ney, and not in exchange for our commodities.

‘ 2. Much worse is that trade which brings in a com‘ modity that is not only consumed amongst us, but hin‘ ders the consumption of the like quantity of ours. As ‘ is the importation of brandy, which hinders the spend‘ ing of our extracts of malt and molasses; therefore ‘ very prudently charged with excessive duties.

‘ 3. That trade is eminently bad, which supplies the ‘ same goods as we manufacture ourselves, especially if ‘ we can make enough for our consumption: And I take ‘ this to be the case of the silk manufacture; which,
‘ with great labour and industry, is brought to perfection
‘ in London, Canterbury, and other places.

‘ 4. The importation upon easy terms of such manu‘ factures as are already introduced in a country, must ‘ be of bad consequence, and check their progress; as ‘ it would undoubtedly be the case of the linen and pa‘ per manufactures in Great-Britain (which are of late ‘ very much improved) if those commodities were suffer‘ ed to be brought in without paying very high duties.

‘ Let us now judge of our trade with France by the ‘ foregoing maxims.

‘ I. The exportation of our woollen goods to France,
‘ is so well barred against, that there is not the least hope ‘ of reaping any benefit by this article. They have their work done for half the price we pay for ours. And since they send great quantities of woollen goods to Ita'y, Spain, Portugal, Turkey, the Rhine, and other places, although they pay a duty upon exportation, it is a demonstration, that they have more than is sufficient for their own wear, and consequently no great occasion for any of ours. The French cannot but be so sensible of the advantage they have over us in point of cheapness, that I do not doubt they will give us leave to import into France not only woollen goods, but all other commodities whatsoever upon very easy duties, provided we permit them to import into Great-Britain wines, brandies, silk, linen and paper, upon paying the same duties as others do. And when that is done, you will send little more to France than now you do, and they will import into Great-Britain ten times more than now they can.

II. As to our superfluities, it must be owned the French have occasion for some of them, as lead, tin, leather, copperas, coals, allum and several other things of small value, as also some few of our plantation-commodities: But these goods they will have whether we take any of theirs or no, because they want them. All these commodities together that the French want from us may amount to about 200000*l.* yearly.

III. As to materials; I do not know of any one sort useful to us that ever was imported from France into England. They have indeed hemp, flax, and wool in abundance, and some raw-silk; but they are too wise to let us have any, especially as long as they entertain any hopes we shall be so self-denying, as to take those materials from them after they are manufactured.

IV. Exchanging commodities for commodities (if for the like value on both sides) might be beneficial; but it is far from being the case between us and France: Our ships went constantly in ballast (except now and then some lead) to St. Malo, Morlaix, Nantes, Rochelle, Bourdeaux, Bayonne, &c. and ever came back full of linen, wines, brandy and paper: And if it was so before the revolution, when one of our pounds sterling cost the French but thirteen livres, what

‘ what are they like to take from us, (except what they ‘ of necessity want) now that for each pound sterling
‘ they must pay us twenty livres, which enhances the ‘ price of all British commodities to the French above
‘ fifty per cent.

‘ V. Goods imported to be re-exported, is certainly a ‘ national advantage; but few or no French goods are ‘ ever exported from Great-Britain, except to our plan‘ tations, but all are consumed at home; therefore no ‘ benefit can be reaped this way by the French trade.

‘ VI. Letting ships to freight cannot but be of some ‘ profit to a nation; but it is very rare if the French ‘ ever make use of any other ships than their own: They ‘ victual and man cheaper than we, therefore nothing
‘ is to be got from them by this article.

‘ VII. Things that are of absolute necessity cannot ‘ be reckoned prejudicial to a nation; but France pro‘ duces nothing that is necessary, or even convenient, or ‘ but which we had better be without, except claret.

‘ VIII. If the importation of commodities of mere ‘ luxury, to be consumed amongst us, be a sensible dis‘ advantage, the French trade, in this particular, might ‘ be highly pernicious to this nation; for if the duties
‘ on French wines be lowered to a considerable degree,
‘ the least we can suppose would be imported into Eng‘ land and Scotland is 18000 tons a year, which being ‘ most clarets, at a moderate computation would cost
‘ in France 450000l.

‘ IX. As to brandy; since we have laid high duties
‘ upon it, the distilling of spirits from malt and molasses
‘ is much improved and increased, by means of which a ‘ good sum of money is yearly saved to the nation; for ‘ very little brandy hath been imported either from Italy,
‘ Portugal, or Spain, by reason that our English spirits
‘ are near as good as those countries brandies. But as ‘ French brandy is esteemed, and is indeed very good, if ‘ the extraordinary duty on that liquor be taken off,
‘ there is no doubt but great quantities will be imported.
‘ We will suppose only 3000 tons a year, which will cost
‘ Great-Britain about 700000l. yearly, and prejudice
‘ besides the extracts of our own malt-spirits.

‘ X. Linen is an article of more consequence than ‘ many people are aware of: Ireland, Scotland, and se‘ veral counties in England, have made large steps to‘ wards the improvement of that useful manufacture,
‘ both in quantity and quality; and with good en‘ couragement would doubtless, in a few years, bring ‘ it to perfection, and perhaps make sufficient for our ‘ own consumption; which besides employing great ‘ numbers of people, and improving many acres of ‘ land, would save us a good sum of money, which is ‘ yearly laid out abroad in that commodity. As the case
‘ stands at present, it improves daily; but if the duties
‘ on French linen be reduced, it is to be feared it will ‘ come over so cheap, that our looms must be laid aside,
‘ and 6 or 700000*l.* a year be sent over to France for ‘ that commodity.

‘ XI. The manufacture of paper is very near a-kin
‘ to that of linen. Since the high duties laid on foreign ‘ paper, and that none hath been imported from France, ‘ where it is cheapest, the making of it is increased to ‘ such a degree in England, that we import none of the ‘ lower sorts from abroad, and make them all ourselves:
‘ But if the French duties be taken off, undoubtedly ‘ most of the mills which are employed in the making ‘ of white paper, must leave off their work, and 30 or ‘ 400000*l.* a year be remitted over to France for that ‘ commodity.

‘ XII. The last article concerns the silk manufac‘ ture. Since the late French wars, it is increased to a ‘ mighty degree. Spittlefields alone manufactures to ‘ the value of two millions a year, and were daily im‘ proving, ’till the late fears about lowering the French ‘ duties. What pity! that so noble a manufacture,
‘ so extensive, and so beneficial to an infinite number
‘ of people, should run the hazard of being ruined!
‘ It is however to be feared, that if the French can ‘ import their wrought silks upon easy terms, they out‘ do us so much in cheapness of labour, and they ‘ have Italian and Levant raw-silk upon so much easier
‘ terms than we, besides great quantities of their own
‘ in Provence, Languedoc and other provinces, that in ‘ all probability half the looms in Spittlefields would ‘ be

‘ be laid down, and our ladies be again clothed in ‘ French silks. The loss that would accrue to the na‘ tion by so great a mischief, cannot be valued at less ‘ than 500000l. a year.

‘ To sum up all, if we pay to France yearly,
 ‘ For their wines l. 450000
 ‘ For their brandies 70000
 ‘ For their linen 600000
 ‘ For their paper 30000
 ‘ For their silks 500000

1650000

‘ And they take from us in lead, tin, lea- }
 ‘ ther, allum, copperas, coals, horn, plates, } 200000
 ‘ &c. and plantation goods, to the value of } ‘ Great-Britain loses by the balance of } ‘ that trade yearly } 1450000

‘ All which is humbly submitted to your consideration
 ‘ by,

S I R, your most humble servant,

GENEROSITY THRIFT.

Advertisement, For the protection of Honour, Truth, Virtue and Innocence.

“ Mr. IRONSIDE has ordered his amanuensis to pre“ pare for his perusal whatever he may have gathered,
 “ from his table-talk, or otherwise, a volume to be print“ ed in twelves, called, The Art of Defamation discovered.
 “ This piece is to consist of the true characters of all per“ sons calumniated by the Examiner; and after such “ characters, the true and only method of fallying them “ set forth in examples from the ingenious and artifi“ cial author, the said Examiner.

“ N. B. To this will be added the true characters of “ persons he has commended, with observations to show,
 “ that panegyrick is not that author’s talent.

Saturday,

N^o 171 Saturday, September 26.

Fuit ista quondam in hac republicâ virtus, ut viri fortes acrioribus suppliciis civem perniciosum, quàm acerbissimum hostem coercerent. Cicer. in Catilin.

There was once that virtue in this commonwealth, that a bad fellow-citizen was thought to deserve a severer correction than the bitterest enemy.

I Have received letters of congratulation and thanks from several of the most eminent chocolate-houses and coffee-houses, upon my late galantry and success in opposing myself to the long swords. One tells me, that whereas his rooms were too little before, now his customers can saunter up and down from corner to corner, and table to table, without any let or molestation. I find I have likewise cleared a great many alleys and by-lanes, made the publick walks about town more spacious, and all the passages about the court and the Exchange more free and open. Several of my female wards have sent me the kindest billets upon this occasion, in which they tell me, that I have saved them some pounds in the year, by freeing their furbelows, flounces, and hoops, from the annoyance both of hilt and point. A scout whom I sent abroad to observe the posture, and to pry into the intentions of the enemy, brings me word, that the Terrible Club is quite blown up, and that I have totally routed the men that seemed to delight in arms. My Lion, whose jaws are at all hours open to intelligence, informs me, that there are a few enormous weapons still in being; but that they are to be met with only in gaming-houses, and some of the obscure retreats of lovers in and about Drury-Lane and Covent-Garden. I am highly delighted with an adventure that befel my witty antagonist Tom Swagger, captain of the band of long swords. He had the misfortune three days ago to fall into company with a master of the noble science of defence, who taking
Mr.

Mr. Swagger, by his Habit, and the Airs he gave himself, to be one of the profession, gave him a fair invitation to Marrowbone, to exercise at the usual weapons. The captain thought this so foul a disgrace to a gentleman, that he flunk away in the greatest confusion, and has never been seen since at the Tilt-yard Coffee-house, nor in any of his usual haunts.

As there is nothing made in vain, and as every plant and every animal, though never so noisom, has its use in the creation; so these men of terror may be disposed of, so as to make a figure in the polite world. It was in this view, that I received a visit last night from a person, who pretends to be employed here from several foreign princes in negotiating matters of less importance. He tells me, that the continual Wars in Europe have, in a manner, quite drained the Cantons of Swisserland of their supernumerary subjects, and that he foresees there will be a great scarcity of them to serve at the entrance of courts, and the palaces of great men. He is of opinion this want may very seasonably be supplied out of the great numbers of such gentlemen, as I have given notice of in my paper of the 25th past, and that his design is in a few weeks, when the town fills, to put out publick advertisements to this effect, not questioning but it may turn to a good account: ‘ That if ‘ any person of good stature and fierce demeanor, as ‘ well members of the Terrible Club, as others of the ‘ like exterior ferocity, whose ambition is to cock
‘ and look big, without exposing themselves to any bodily danger, will repair to his lodgings; they shall ‘ (provided they bring their swords with them) be furnished with shoulder-belts, broad hats, red feathers,
‘ and halberts, and be transported without farther trouble into several courts and families of distinction,
‘ where they may eat and drink, and strut at free cost.’
As this project was not communicated to me for a secret, I thought it might be for the service of the abovesaid persons to divulge it with all convenient speed; that those who are disposed to employ their talents to the best advantage, and to shine in the station of life for which they seem to be born, may have time to adorn their upper lip, by raising a quick-set beard there in the form

form of whiskers, that they may pass to all intents and purposes for true Swifffers.

Indefatigable NESTOR,

‘ GIVE me leave to thank you, in behalf of myself
‘ and my whole family, for the daily diversion
‘ and improvements we receive from your labours. At ‘ the same time I must acquaint you, that we have all ‘ of us taken a mighty liking to your Lion. His roar-
‘ ings are the joy of my heart, and I have a little boy, ‘ not three years old, that talks of nothing else, and ‘ who, I hope, will be more afraid of him as he grows
‘ up. That your animal may be kept in good plight,
‘ and not roar for want of prey; I shall out of my ‘ esteem and affection for you, contribute what I can ‘ towards his sustenance; “Love me, love my Lion,” says
‘ the proverb. I will not pretend, at any time, to fur‘ nish out a full meal for him; but I shall now and then ‘ send him a savoury morsel, a tid-bit. You must ‘ know, I am but a kind of holiday writer, and never ‘ could find in my heart to set my pen to a work of ‘ above five or six periods long. My friends tell me my ‘ performances are Little and Pretty. As they have no
‘ manner of connexion one with the other, I write them ‘ upon loose pieces of paper, and throw them into a ‘ drawer by themselves; this drawer I call the Lion’s ‘ Pantry. I give you my word, I put nothing into it ‘ but what is clean and wholsom nouriture. Therefore ‘ remember me to the Lion, and let him know, that I ‘ shall always pick and cull the Pantry for him; and ‘ there are morsels in it, I can assure you, will make his ‘ chaps to water.

I am, with the greatest respect,

S I R,

your most obedient servant,

and most assiduous reader.

I must ask pardon of Mrs. Dorothy Care, that I have suffered her billet to lie by me these three weeks without

out taking the least notice of it. But I believe the kind warning in it, to our sex, will not be now too late.

Good Mr. IRONSIDE,

‘ I Have waited with impatience for that same Uni-
 ‘ corn, you promised should be erected for the Fair
 ‘ Sex. My business is, before winter comes on, to de‘ fire you would precaution your own sex against being ‘ Adamites, by exposing their bare breasts to the rigour
 ‘ of the season. It was this practice amongst the fel‘ lows, which at first encouraged our sex to shew so much ‘ of their necks. The downy dock-leaves you speak of ‘ would make good stomachers for the Beaus. In a ‘ word, good NESTOR, so long as the men take a pride
 ‘ in shewing their hairy skins, we may with a much bet‘ ter grace set out our snowy chests to view. We are,
 ‘ we own, the weaker, but at the same time you must ‘ own, much the more beautiful sex.

I am, S I R,

your humble reader,

DOROTHY CARE.

N^o 172 Monday, September 28.

—Vitam excoluere per artes.

Virg. Æn. 6. v. 663.

They grac’d their age with new invented arts.

DRYDEN.

Mr. IRONSIDE,

I Have been a long time in expectation of something from you on the subject of speech and letters.
 I believe the world might be as agreeably entertained, on that subject, as with any thing that ever came into the Lion’s mouth. For this end I send you the following sketch; and am,

yours, PHILOGRAM.

‘ Upon

‘ Upon taking a view of the several species of living ‘ creatures our earth is stocked with, we may easily ob‘ serve, that the lower orders of them, such as insects
‘ and fishes, are wholly without a power of making ‘ known their wants and calamities: Others, which are ‘ conversant with man, have some few ways of expref‘ sing the pleasure and pain they undergo by certain ‘ sounds and gestures; but man has articulate sounds ‘ whereby to make known his inward sentiments and af‘ fections, though his organs of speech are no other ‘ than what he has in common with many other less per‘ fect animals. But the use of letters, as significative
‘ of these sounds, is such an additional improvement to ‘ them, that I know not whether we ought not to at‘ tribute the invention of them to the assistance of a ‘ power more than human.

‘ There is this great difficulty which could not but ‘ attend the first invention of letters, to wit, That all ‘ the world must conspire in affixing steadily the same ‘ signs to their sounds, which affixing was at first as ar‘ bitrary as possible; there being no more connexion
‘ between the letters and the sounds they are expressive
‘ of, than there is between those sounds and the ideas
‘ of the mind they immediately stand for: Notwith‘ standing which difficulty, and the variety of languages;
‘ the powers of the letters in each are very nearly the ‘ same, being in all places about twenty four.

‘ But be the difficulty of the invention as great as it ‘ will, the use of it is manifest, particularly in the ad‘ vantage it has above the method of conveying our ‘ thoughts by words or sounds, because this way we are ‘ confined to narrow limits of place and time: whereas ‘ we may have occasion to correspond with a friend at ‘ a distance; or desire, upon a particular occasion, to ‘ take the opinion of an honest gentleman, who has ‘ been dead this thousand years. Both which defects
‘ are supplied by the noble invention of letters. By this ‘ means we materialize our ideas, and make them as ‘ lasting as the ink and paper, their vehicles. This ‘ making our thoughts by Art visible to the eye, which ‘ Nature had made intelligible only by the ear, is next ‘ to the adding a sixth sense, as it is a supply in case of
‘ the

‘ the defect of one of the five Nature gave us, namely;
‘ hearing, by making the voice become visible.

‘ Have any of any school of painters gotten them‘ selves an immortal name, by drawing a face, or paint‘ ing a landkip; by laying down on a piece of canvas
‘ a representation only of what nature had given them ‘ originals? What applauses will he merit, who first ‘ made his ideas fit to his pencil, and drew to his eye
‘ the picture of his mind! Painting represents the out‘ ward man, or the shell; but cannot reach the inhabi‘ tant within, or the very organ by which the inhabi‘ tant is revealed: This art may reach to represent a ‘ face, but cannot paint a voice. Kneller can draw the ‘ majesty of the Queen’s person; Kneller can draw her ‘ sublime air, and paint her bestowing hand as fair as ‘ the lilly; but the historian must inform posterity, that ‘ she has one peculiar excellence above all other mor‘ tals, that her ordinary speech is more charming than ‘ song.

‘ But to drop the comparison of this art with any ‘ other, let us see the benefit of it in itself. By it the ‘ English trader may hold commerce with the inhabi‘ tants of the East or West Indies, without the trouble
‘ of a journey. Astronomers seated at a distance of the ‘ earth’s diameter asunder, may confer; what is spoken
‘ and thought at one pole, may be heard and under‘ stood at the other. The philosopher who wished he ‘ had a window in his breast, to lay open his heart to ‘ all the world, might as easily have revealed the secrets
‘ of it this way, and as easily left them to the world,
‘ as wished it. This silent art of speaking by letters, ‘ remedies the inconvenience arising from distance of ‘ time, as well as place; and is much beyond that of ‘ the Egyptians, who could preserve their mummies for ‘ ten centuries. This preserves the works of the im‘ mortal part of men, so as to make the dead still use‘ ful to the living. To this we are beholden for the ‘ works of Demosthenes and Cicero, of Seneca and Pla-
‘ to: without it the Iliad of Homer, and Æneid of Vir‘ gil had died with their authors; but by this art those ‘ excellent men still speak to us.

‘ I shall be glad if what I have said on this art, gives ‘ you any new hints for the more useful or agreeable ap‘ plication of it.

I am, S I R, &c.

I shall conclude this Paper with an extract from a poem in praise of the invention of writing, “ Written by a “ Lady.” I am glad of such a quotation, which is not only another instance how much the world is obliged to this art, but also a shining example of what I have heretofore asserted, that the fair sex are as capable as men of the liberal sciences; and indeed there is no very good argument against the frequent instruction of females of condition this way, but that they are but too powerful without that advantage. The verses of the charming author are as follow.

Blest be the man! his memory at least,
Who found the art, thus to unfold his breast;
And taught succeeding times an easy way
Their secret thoughts by Letters to convey;
To baffle absence, and secure delight,
Which, till that time, was limited to sight.
The parting farewell spoke, the last adieu,
The less’ning distance past, then loss of view,
The friend was gone, which some kind moments gave,
And absence separated, like the grave.
When for a wife the youthful Patriarch sent,
The camels, jewels, and the steward went,
And wealthy equipage, tho’ grave and slow;
But not a line, that might the lover show.
The ring and bracelets woo’d her hands and arms,
But had she known of melting words the charms,
That under secret seals in ambush lie
To catch the soul, when drawn into the eye;
The fair Assyrian had not took his guide,
Nor her soft heart in chains of pearl been ty’d.

Tuesday,

 N^o 173 Tuesday, September 20

—Nec serò comantem

Narcissum, aut flexi tacuisssem vimen Acanthi, Pallentesque Hederas, & amantes littora myrtos.

Virg. Georg. 4. v. 122.

The late Narcissus, and the winding trail
Of Bears-foot, Myrtles green, and Ivy pale.

DRYDEN.

I lately took a particular friend of mine to my house in the country, not without some apprehension that it could afford little entertainment to a man of his polite taste, particularly in architecture and gardening, who had so long been conversant with all that is beautiful and great in either. But it was a pleasant surprise to me, to hear him often declare, he had found in my little retirement that beauty which he always thought wanting in the most celebrated seats, or if you will villas, of the nation. This he described to me in those verses, with which Martial begins one of his epigrams :

*Baiana nostri villa, Bassæ, Faustini,
Non otiosis ordinata myrtetis,
Viduaque platano, tonsilique buxeto,
Ingrata lati spatia detinet campi;
Sed rure vero barbaroque lætatur.*

Ep. 58. l. 3.

Our friend Faustinus' country seat I've seen :
No myrtles, plac'd in rows, and idly green,
No widow'd platane, nor clip'd box-tree, there,
The useless soil unprofitably share ;
But simple nature's hand, with nobler grace,
Diffuses artless beauties o'er the place.

There is certainly something in the amiable simplicity of unadorned nature, that spreads over the mind a more noble sort of tranquility, and a loftier sensation of pleasure, than can be raised from the nicer scenes of art.

This

This was the taste of the ancients in their gardens, as we may discover from the description extant of them. The two most celebrated wits of the world have each of them left us a particular picture of a garden; wherein those great masters, being wholly unconfined, and painting at pleasure, may be thought to have given a full idea of what they esteemed most excellent in this way. These (one may observe) consist intirely of the useful part of horticulture, fruit-trees, herbs, water, &c. The pieces I am speaking of are Virgil's account of the garden of the old Corycian, and Homer's of that of Alcinous. The first of these is already known to the English reader, by the excellent versions of Mr. Dryden and Mr. Addison. The other having never been attempted in our language with any elegance, and being the most beautiful plan of this sort that can be imagined, I shall here present the reader with a translation of it.

The garden of Alcinous, from HOMER's Odyss. 7.

Close to the gates a spacious garden lies,
 From storms defended and inclement skies:
 Four acres was th' allotted space of ground,
 Fenc'd with a green inclosure all around.
 Tall thriving trees confest the fruitful mold;
 The red'ning apple ripens here to gold:
 Here the blue fig with luscious juice o'erflows,
 With deeper red the full pomegranate glows:
 The branch here bends beneath the weighty pear,
 And verdant olives flourish round the year.
 The balmy spirit of the western gale
 Eternal breathes on fruits untaught to fail:
 Each dropping pear a following pear supplies,
 On apples apples, figs on figs arise;
 The same mild season gives the blooms to blow,
 The buds to harden, and the fruits to grow.

Here order'd vines in equal ranks appear,
 With all th' united labours of the year.
 Some to unload the fertile branches run,
 Some dry the black'ning clusters in the sun.

Others

Others to tread the liquid harvest join,
 The groaning presses foam with floods of wine.
 Here are the vines in early flow'r descry'd,
 Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side,
 And there in Autumn's richest purple dy'd.

Beds of all various herbs, for ever green,
 In beauteous order terminate the scene.

Two plenteous fountains the whole prospect crown'd;

This thro' the gardens leads its streams around,
 Visits each plant, and waters all the ground:
 While that in pipes beneath the palace flows,
 And thence its current on the town bestows;
 To various use their various streams they bring,
 The people one, and one supplies the king.

Sir William Temple has remarked, that this description contains all the justest rules and provisions which can go toward composing the best gardens. Its extent was four Acres, which in those times of simplicity was looked upon as a large one, even for a prince: It was inclosed all round for defence; and for conveniency joined close to the gates of the palace.

He mentions next the trees, which were standards, and suffered to grow to their full height. The fine description of the fruits that never failed, and the eternal zephyrs, is only a more noble and poetical way of expressing the continual succession of one fruit after another throughout the year.

The Vineyard seems to have been a plantation distinct from the Garden; as also the Beds of Greens mentioned afterwards at the extremity of the inclosure, in the nature and usual place of our Kitchen-Gardens.

The two fountains are disposed very remarkably. They rose within the inclosure, and were brought by conduits or ducts, one of them to water all parts of the gardens, and the other underneath the palace into the town, for the service of the publick.

How contrary to this simplicity is the modern practice of gardening? We seem to make it our study to recede from nature, not only in the various confure of greens into the most regular and formal shapes, but even in in monstrous attempts beyond the reach of the art itself. We run into sculpture, and are yet better pleased to have our trees in the most awkward figures of men and animals, than in the most regular of their own.

*Hinc & nexilibus videas è frondibus hortos,
Implexos latè muros, & mœnia circum
Porrigere, & latas è ramis surgere turres;
Deflexam & myrtum in puppes, atque ærea rostra:
In buxisque undare fretum, atque è rore rudentes.
Parte aliâ frondere suis tentoria castris;
Scutaque spiculaque & jaculantia citria vallos.*

Here interwoven branches form a wall,
And from the living fence green turrets rise:
There ships of myrtle sail in seas of box:
A green encampment yonder meets the eye,
And loaded citrons bearing shields and spears.

I believe it is no wrong observation, that persons of genius, and those who are most capable of art, are always most fond of nature; as such are chiefly sensible, that all art consists in the imitation and study of nature. On the contrary, people of the common level of understanding are principally delighted with the little niceties and fantastical operations of art, and constantly think that finest which is least natural. A citizen is no sooner proprietor of a couple of yews, but he entertains thoughts of erecting them into giants, like those of Guild-hall. I know an eminent cook, who beautified his country-seat with a coronation dinner in greens; where you see the champion flourishing on horseback at one end of the table, and the queen in perpetual youth at the other.

For the benefit of all my loving countrymen of this curious taste, I shall here publish a catalogue of greens to be disposed of by an eminent town-gardiner, who has lately applied to me upon this head. He represents, that for the advancement of a politer sort of ornament in the villas and gardens adjacent to this great city, and in order to distinguish those places from the mere barbarous countries of gross nature, the world stands much in need of a virtuoso gardener who has a turn to sculpture, and is thereby capable of improving upon the ancients of his profession in the imagery of ever-greens. My correspondent is arrived to such perfection, that he cuts family pieces of men, women or children. Any ladies that please may have their own effigies in myrtle, or their husbands in horn-beam. He is a puritan wag, and never fails, when he shows his garden, to repeat that passage in the Psalms, "Thy wife shall be as the fruitful vine, and thy children as olive branches round thy table." I shall proceed to his catalogue, as he sent it for my recommendation.

in

Adam and Eve in yew; Adam a little shattered by the fall of the tree of knowledge in the great storm: Eve and the serpent very flourishing.

The tower of Babel, not yet finished.

St George in box; his arm scarce long enough, but will be in a condition to stick the dragon by next April.

A green dragon of the same, with a tail of ground-ivy for the present.

N. B. These two not to be sold separately.

Edward the Black Prince in Cypress.

A laurustine bear in blossom, with a juniper hunter in berries.

A pair of giants, stunted, to be sold cheap.

A queen Elizabeth in phylyræa, a little inclining to the green sickness, but of full growth.

Another queen Elizabeth in myrtle, which was very forward, but miscarried by being too near a savine.

An old maid of honour in wormwood.

A topping Ben Johnson in laurel.

Divers eminent modern poets in bays, somewhat blighted, to be disposed of, a pennyworth.

A quick set hog shot up into a porcupine, by its being forgot a week in rainy weather.

A lavender pig with sage growing in his belly.

Noah's ark in holly, standing on the mount; the ribs a little damaged for want of water.

A pair of maidenheads in fir, in great forwardness.

N^o 174 Wednesday, September 30.

Salve Pæoniæ largitor nobilis undæ,

Salve Dardanii gloria magna soli:

Publica morborum requies, commune medentum

Auxilium, præsens numen, inempta salus.

Claud.

Hail, greatest good Dardanian fields bestow,
At whose command Pæonian waters flow,
Unpurchas'd health! that dost thy aid impart
Both to the patient, and the doctor's art!

IN publick assemblies there are generally some envious splenetick people, who having no merit to procure respect, are ever finding fault with those who distinguish themselves. This happens more frequently at those places, where this season of the year calls persons of both sexes together for their health. I have had reams of letters from Bath, Epsom, Tunbridge, and St. Wenefrede's well; wherein I could observe that a concern for honour and virtue proceeded from the want of health, beauty, or fine petticoats. A lady who subscribes herself Eudofia, writes a bitter invective against Chloe the celebrated dancer; but I have learned, that she herself is lame of the rheumatism. Another, who hath been a prude ever since she had the small-pox, is very bitter against the coquettes and their indecent airs; and a sharp wit hath sent me a keen epigram against the gamblers; but I took notice, that it was not written upon gilt paper.

Having had several strange pieces of intelligence from the Bath; as, that more constitutions were weakened there than repaired; that the physicians were not more busy in destroying old bodies, than the young fellows in producing new ones; with several other common-place strokes of rallery: I resolved to look upon the company there, as I returned lately out of the country.

It

It was a great jest to see such a grave ancient person, as I am, in an embroidered cap and brocade night-gown. But, besides the necessity of complying with the custom, by these means I passed undiscovered, and had a pleasure I much covet, of being alone in a crowd. It was no little satisfaction to me, to view the mixt mass of all ages and dignities upon a level, partaking of the same benefits of nature, and mingling in the same diversions. I sometimes entertained myself by observing what a large quantity of ground was hid under spreading petticoats; and what little patches of earth were covered by creatures with wigs and hats, in comparison to those spaces that were distinguished by flounces, fringes, and furbelows. From the earth, my fancy was diverted to the water, where the distinctions of sex and condition are concealed; and where the mixture of men and women hath given occasion to some persons of light imaginations, to compare the Bath to the fountain of Salmacis, which had the virtue of joining the two sexes into one person; or to the stream wherein Diana washed herself, when she bestowed horns on Acteon: But by one of a serious turn, these healthful springs may rather be likened to the Stygian waters, which made the body invulnerable; or to the river of Lethe, one draught of which washed away all pain and anguish in a moment.

As I have taken upon me a name which ought to abound in humanity, I shall make it my business, in this paper, to cool and assuage those malignant humours of scandal which run throughout the body of men and women there assembled; and after the manner of those famous waters, I will endeavour to wipe away all foul aspersions, to restore bloom and vigour to decayed reputations, and set injured characters upon their legs again. I shall herein regulate myself by the example of that good man, who used to talk with charity of the greatest villains; nor was ever heard to speak with rigour of any one, until he affirmed with severity that Nero was a wag.

Having thus prepared thee, gentle reader, I shall not scruple to entertain thee with a panegyric upon the Gamesters. I have indeed spoken incautiously heretofore of that class of men; but I should forfeit all titles to modesty, should I any longer oppose the common sense of the nobility and gentry of the kingdom. Were we to treat all those with contempt, who are the favourites of blind chance, few levees would be crowded. It is not the height of sphere in which a man moves, but the manner in which he acts, that makes him truly valuable. When therefore I see a Gentleman lose his money with serenity, I recognize in him all the great qualities of a philosopher. If he storms, and invokes the gods, I lament that he is not placed at the head of a regiment. The great gravity of the countenances round Harrison's table, puts me in mind of a council board; and the indefatigable application of the several combatants, furnishes me with an unanswerable reply to those gloomy mortals, who censure this as an idle life. In short, I cannot see any reason why Gentlemen should be hindered from raising a fortune by those means, which at the same time enlarge their minds. Nor shall I speak dishonourably of some little artifice and finesse used upon these occasions; since the world is so just to any man who is become a possessor of wealth, as not to respect him the less, for the methods he took to come by it.

Upon considerations like these the Ladies share in these diversions. I must own, that I receive great pleasure in seeing my pretty country-women engaged in an amusement which puts them upon producing so many virtues. Hereby they acquire such a boldness, as raises them near the lordly creature man. Here they are taught such contempt of wealth, as may dilate their minds, and prevent many curtain-lectures. Their natural tenderness is a weakness here easily unlearned; and I find my soul exalted, when I see a Lady sacrifice the fortune of her children with as little concern as a Spartan or a Roman dame. In such a place as the Bath I might urge, that the casting of a die is indeed the properest exercise for a fair creature to assist the waters; not to mention the opportunity it gives to display the well-turned arm, and to scatter to advantage the rays of the diamond. But I am satisfied, that the Gamester-Ladies have surmounted the little vanities of shewing their beauty, which they so far neglect, as to throw their features into violent distortions, and wear away their lillies and roses in tedious watching, and restless lucubrations. I should rather observe that their chief passion is an emulation of manhood; which I am the more inclined to believe, because, in spite of all slanders, their confidence in their virtue keeps them up all night, with the most dangerous creatures of our sex. It is to me an undoubted argument of their ease of conscience, that they go directly from church to the gaming-table; and so highly reverence play, as to make it a great part of their exercise on Sundays.
4 throw

The Water Poets are an innocent tribe, and deserve all the encouragement I can give them. It would be barbarous to treat those authors with bitterness, who never write out of the season, and whose works are useful with the waters. I made it my care therefore to sweeten some four criticks who were sharp upon a few sonnets, which, to speak in the language of the Bath, were mere alkalies. I took particular notice of a lenitive electuary, which was wrapped up in some of these gentle compositions; and am persuaded that the pretty one who took it, was as much relieved by the cover as the medicine. There are a hundred general topicks put into metre every year, viz. “The lover is inflamed in “the water; or, he finds his death where he sought
“his cure; or, the nymph feels her own pain, without
“out regarding her lover’s torment.” These being for ever repeated, have at present a very good effect; and a physician assures me, that laudanum is almost out of doors at the Bath.

The physicians here are very numerous, but very good-natured. To these charitable Gentlemen I owe, that I was cured, in a week’s time, of more distempers than I ever had in my life. They had almost killed me with their humanity. A learned fellow-lodger prescribed me a little something, at my first coming, to keep up my spirits; and the next morning I was so much enlivened by another, as to have an order to bleed for my fever. I was proffered a cure for the scurvy by a third, and had a recipe for the dropsey gratis before night. In vain did I modestly decline these favours; for I was awakened early in the morning by an apothecary, who brought me a dose from one of my well-wishers. I paid him, but withal told him severely, that I never took physick. My landlord hereupon took me for an Italian merchant that suspected poison; but the apothecary, with more sagacity, guessed that I was certainly a physician myself.

The oppression of civilities which I underwent from the sage Gentlemen of the faculty, frightened me from making such inquiries into the nature of these springs, as would have furnished out a nobler entertainment upon the Bath, than the loose hints I have now thrown together. Every man who hath received any benefit there, ought, in proportion to his abilities, to improve, adorn, or recommend it. A Prince should found hospitals, the noble and rich may diffuse their ample charities. Mr. Tompion gave a clock to the Bath, and I Nestor Ironside have dedicated a Guardian.

N^o 175 Thursday, October 1.

Quique sui memores alios fecere merendo.

Virg. Æn. 6. v. 664.

Who rais'd by merit an immortal name.

THE noble genius of Virgil would have been exalted still higher, had he had the advantage of Christianity. According to our scheme of thoughts, if the word Memores in the front of this paper were changed into Similes, it would have very much heightened the motive to virtue in the reader. To do good and great actions merely to gain reputation, and transmit a name to posterity, is a vicious appetite, and will certainly insnare the person who is moved by it, on some occasions, into a false delicacy for fear of reproach; and at others, into artifices which taint his mind, though they may enlarge his fame. The endeavour to make men like you, rather than mindful of you, is not subject to such ill consequences, but moves with its reward in its own hand; or, to speak more in the language language of the world, a man with this aim is as happy as a man in an office, that is paid out of money under his own direction. There have been very worthy examples of this self-denying virtue among us in this nation; but I do not know of a nobler example in this taste, than that of the late Mr. Boyle, who founded a lecture for the "Proof of the Christian Religion, against" "atheists, and other notorious infidels." The reward of perpetual memory amongst men, which might possibly have some share in this sublime charity, was certainly considered but in a second degree; and Mr. Boyle had it in his thoughts to make men imitate him as well as speak of him, when he was gone off our stage.

The world has received much good from this institution, and the noble emulation of great men on the inexhaustible subject of the essence, praise and attributes of the Deity, has had the natural effect, which always attends this kind of contemplation; to wit, that he who writes upon it with a sincere heart, very eminently excels whatever he has produced on any other occasion. It eminently appears from this observation, that a particular blessing has been bestowed on this lecture. This great philosopher provided for us, after his death, an employment not only suitable to our condition, but to his own at the same time. It is a sight fit for angels, to behold the benefactor and the persons obliged, not only in different places, but under different beings, employed in the same work.

This worthy man studied nature, and traced all her ways to those of her unsearchable author. When he had found him, he gave this bounty for the praise and contemplation of him. To one who has not run through regular courses of philosophical inquiries, (the other learned labourers in this vineyard will forgive me) I cannot but principally recommend the book, intitled, Physico-Theology. Printed for William Innys in St. Paul's Church-yard.

It is written by Mr. Derham, rector of Upminster in Essex. I do not know what Upminster is worth; but I am sure, had I the best living in England to give, I should not think the addition of it sufficient acknowledgment of his merit; especially since I am informed, that the simplicity of his life is agreeable to his useful knowledge and learning.

The praise of this author seems to me to be, the great perspicuity and method which render his work intelligible and pleasing to people who are strangers to such inquiries, as well as to the learned. It is a very desirable entertainment to find occasions of pleasure and satisfaction in those objects and occurrences which we have all our lives, perhaps, overlooked; or beheld, without exciting any reflections that made us wiser or happier. The plain good man does, as with a wand, shew us the wonders and spectacles in all nature, and the particular capacities with which all living creatures are endowed for their several ways of life; how the organs of creatures are made according to the different paths in which they are to move and provide for themselves and families; whether they are to creep, to leap, to swim, to fly, to walk; whether they are to inhabit the bowels of the earth, the coverts of the wood, the muddy or clear streams; to howl in forests, or converse in cities. All life from that of a worm to that of a man is explained; and as I may so speak, the wondrous works of the creation, by the observations of this author, lie before us as objects that create love and admiration; which, without such explications, strike us only with confusion and amazement.

The man who, before he had this book, dressed and went out to loiter and gather up something to entertain a mind too vacant, no longer needs news to give himself amusement; the very air he breathes suggests abundant matter for his thoughts. He will consider that he has begun another day of life, to breathe with all other creatures in the same mass of air, vapours and clouds, which surround our globe; and of all the numberless animals that live by receiving momentary life, or rather momentary and new reprieves from death, at their nostrils, he only stands erect, conscious and contemplative of the benefaction.

A man who is not capable of philosophical reflections from his own education, will be as much pleased as with any other good news which he has not before heard. The agitations of the wind, and the falling of the rains, are what are absolutely necessary for his welfare and accommodation. This kind of reader will behold the light with a new joy, and a sort of reasonable rapture. He will be led from the appendages which attend and surround our globe, to the contemplation of the globe itself, the distribution of the earth and waters, the variety and quantity of all things provided for the uses of our world: Then will his contemplation, which was too diffused and general, be let down to particulars, to different soils and moulds, to the beds of minerals and stones, into caverns and volcanos, and then again to the tops of mountains, and then again to the fields and valleys.
the

When the author has acquainted his reader with the place of his abode; he informs him of his capacity to make himself easy and happy in it by the gift of senses, by their ready organs: By shewing him the structure of those organs, the disposition of the ear for the receipt of sounds, of the nostril for smell, the tongue for taste, the nerves to avoid harms by our feeling, and the eye by our sight.

The whole work is concluded (as it is the sum of fifteen sermons in proof of the existence of the Deity) with reflections which apply each distinct part of it to an end, for which the author may hope to be rewarded with an immortality much more to be desired, than that of remaining in eternal honour among all the sons of men.

A G E N E R A L
I N D E X

T O T H E
Two Volumes of the G U A R D I A N.

N. B. The NUMERAL LETTERS denote the VOLUME, and the FIGURES refer to the PAGE in which the matters are contained.

A.

A Cademy, what a youth first learns there, Vol. I.
Page 95.

Active men, compared with speculative, II. 179, 180.

Acts, public at Oxford, two great reasons against them,
II. 60.

Adam, his vision of souls, II. 216.

Adamite, a sect so called, II. 203.

Age, if healthy, happy, I. 104.

— dwells upon past times, I. 18.

Aguire, his story, an instance of the spirit of revenge,
I. 31.

Airs the penman, his vanity, I. 1.

Alcibiades, his character and soliloquy before an engagement, I. 348.

Alcinous, his gardens described, from Homer, II. 356.

Alehouse-keeper, an elegant one on Hampstead road, II.
236.

Alexander, a letter from him to Aristotle, II. 112.

Alegories, directions for using them, II. 267.

Alnaraschin, king of Persia, his story, II. 328.

Alonzo, Don, a fatal instance of the effects of jealousy,
II. 152.

I N D E X.

- Alphonso*, his story from Strada's Lucan, II. 137.
Aminta of Tasso, compared with Guarini's pastor fido, I. 113.
Anacreon, his instructions to a painter for painting his mistress, II. 336.
Anaximander, a saying of his, on being laughed at for singing, II. 205.
 Ancestors, their examples should excite to great and virtuous actions, II. 210.
 Ancestry, how far to be venerated, ibid.
 ——— renders the good only illustrious, II. 151.
 ——— ridiculous for a man to value himself upon it, II. 210.
 Ancients, crying them up reprov'd, I. 100.
 ——— all that is good in writing not borrowed from them, I. 51.
 ——— distinguished by Strada, II. 136.
Androcles, story of him and the Lion, II. 218.
 Anger, defined, II. 174.
 Animals, a degree of gratitude owing to them that serve us, I. 263.
 ——— cruelty towards them condemned, I. 260.
Anne Bullen, tragedy of, a scene of distress therein, I. 78.
 Annihilation, by whom desired, II. 32.
 Ants, natural history of them, II. 171. 281 to 293.
 Apothecary in Romeo and Juliet, described, I. 351.
 Arcadian, the true character of one, I. 92.
Aristotle, contemned censure, II. 204.
 Art, those most capable of it, always fond of nature, II. 358.
 Artificers capital, a petition from them, I. 275.
Aspasia, a most excellent woman, I. 8. 19.
Asphalties, lake of, a discourse thereon, I. 260.
 Astronomy, the study of it recommended, I. 302.
 Atalantis (the author of it) to whom a-kin, II. 99.
Atbalia (of Racine) part of it sublime, II. 130.
 Atheism more grievous than religion, II. 48.
 Atheist, behaviour of one in sickness, I. 160.
Athenais, a Grecian Virgin, married to the Emperor Theodosius, II. 279.
 Attraction of bodies applied to minds, II. 163.
Augustus Caesar, Virgil's praises of him, II. 215.

I N D E X:

Aurence-Zebe, Tragedy of, wherein faulty, II. 110.
 Author, account of one raising contributions, I. 248.

B.

B Acon, Sir Francis, remarks on the stile of his history of Henry VII. I. 102.

Barbers, inconveniences attending their being historians, I. 210.

Bareface (Will), desires one of Lady Lizard's daughters for a wife, I. 154.

Barsisa, Santon, his story from the Turkish Tales, II. 248.

Bath, customs of that place, II. 360.

—————Wife of, a Comedy, characterised, I. 213.

Bawd, a mother so, to her own daughter, I. 70, 71.

Bear-baiting a barbarous custom, I. 261.

Beau, an academical one described, I. 42.

—————a species to be commiserated, I. 268.

Beauty, inconveniences attending it, II. 14.

—————at war with fortitude, II. 267.

—————imperfect, described by Prior, II. 15.

Benevolence, the seeds of it implanted in the human soul, II. 165.

Betty, Miss, her history, II. 298.

Beverige, Bishop, a sublime passage quoted from his works, I. 318.

Bias, his way of silencing calumny, II. 204.

Bicknell, Mrs. a comedian, commended, I. 213.

—————furnished with a dress from the wardrobe of the Lizard's, ibid.

Binicorn (Humphrey) his proposal for printing a dissertation on horns, II. 155.

Birds, their examples proposed to imitation, II. 160.

—————observations on their conjugal and parental effects, II. 159.

Blanket, when that discipline is necessary, I. 319.

Blood, by what tainted, II. 211.

Bodkin, Timothy, his letter concerning short swords, II. 239.

Boileau, a French critic, his account of the sublime, II. 130.

Books, an odd collection of them, I. 259.

Bosoms, naked, a great grievance, II. 128.

Bosoms

I N D E X.

- Bosoms, the Pope's order against them, II. 128.
 Boys, their delights cheap and innocent, I. 267.
 Bribery, none in a present of liquor, II. 305.
Bruce, Lord, his challenge to, and duel with Sir Edward Sackville, II. 176. 195.
Bubnelia, angry about the tucker, II. 104.
 Building, errors in undertaking it, I. 24.
 Burial service, solemn and moving, I. 87.
Button, Daniel, his letter in praise of his own Coffee-house, II. 17.
 ————twitting, not eloquent, II. 9.

C.

- Calamities, the general source of them, I. 3.
 Calumny nothing so hard for a generous mind to get over, II. 203.
 ————how silenced by Philosophers, II. 204.
Cambray, Fenelon, Archbishop of, account of his treatise of the existence, wisdom and omnipotence of God, I. 296.
 ————the cause of his disgrace, I. 202.
Cardan, the Philosopher, what he says of the affliction of love, I. 30.
Care, Dorothy, complains of mens open bosoms, II. 351.
Cato, Tragedy of, commended, I. 132. 178, &c.
 ————beautiful families in that Tragedy, I. 279.
 ————Prologue and Epilogue thereto, I. 134, 135.
 Chaplains to persons of quality ought to be respected, II. 313.
 Charity, a virtue of the heart, II. 324.
 ————a signal proof of the divinity of the Christian Religion, II. 165.
 ————intended by Nestor Ironside, Esq; II. 325.
 ————schools recommended, II. 92.
Charwell, Mr. his character, I. 35. His purchase and improvement of an estate, I. 36—37, &c. Borrowed many of his maxims from Monfieur Colbert, I. 219.
 Chastity, the noblest male qualification, I. 188.
China, Emperor of, honours none till after death, II. 60.
 Chryso Magnet, or the loadstone which attracts gold, described by Strada, II. 147.
 Church (Christian) the divine order and œconomy thereof, compared to the fabrick of St. Pauls, I. 300.

I N D E X.

- Church the word misapplied, I. 343.
 ————wherein the word wants explanation, I. 344.
Clarina, a young lady unhappy by her beauty, II. 14.
 Classics, absolutely necessary to study them, II. 18.
Claudian (Strada's) II. 126. 139.
 ————his court of Venus, II. 167.
 ————Pluto's speech to Proserpine, from him, II. 319.
Cleomenes, a Tragedy, by Dryden, wherein faulty, II. 108.
 Clergymen, respect due to them, I. 10.
 ————considered as Philosophers, II. 180.
 ————the end they should propose to themselves, I. 55.
 ————abused, I. 345.
 Climate (British) very inconstant, II. 81.
 Clown, character of an impudent one, II. 309.
 Club, of little men, II. 36.
 ————short club, ibid.
 ————silent club, II. 142.
 ————tall club, II. 102.
 ————terrible club, II. 233.
 Coaches, young gentlemen reproved for driving them,
 I. 57.
 ————an intrigue carried on by means of one, I. 58. 59.
 Cock-fighting, a barbarous custom, I. 261.
Colbert, Monsieur, his conversation with the French King concerning the great power of the Dutch, I. 220, &c.
 Cold Bath, recommended, II. 82.
 Colleges, chiefly erected on religious considerations, I. 269.
 Comet, a remarkable one in 1680 described, II. 86.
 Commandments were made for the vulgar, I. 111.
 Common fame, vision of, I. 291.
 Complaisance, useful in conversation to make it agreeable,
 II. 309.
Congreve, Mr. characters drawn by him, II. 15. 124.
 Conscience, is to the soul what health is to the body, II.
 203.
 ————the efficacy and force of it in the hour of death,
 II. 207.
 ————a good one, the only relief against the pain of calumny, ibid.
 Conversation, one of the noblest privileges of reason, I. 97.
 ————rules for it, ibid.
 Coquet, how she should paint herself, II. 221.

Covetous.

I N D E X.

- Covetousness, precautions against it, I. 77.
 ———the vice of, enters deeper into the soul than any other, I. 78.
 Country life, the charms and pleasures of it, I. 90.
 ———why we are pleased with it, ibid.
 Countrymen, meeting abroad, their familiarity, II. 163.
 Courtship, the extravagance of it described, II. 119.
 Cowards, never forgive, I. 81.
 Cowley, Mr. criticism on his songs, I. 68.
 Coxcomb, at the head of a family a melancholy thing, II. 321.
 Crabtree, Major, his sour saying of the ladies, I. 105.
 Crassus, an old lethargick valetudinarian, II. 83.
 Creation, works of, the divine consideration of them, II. 365.
 Critics, wherein they differ from cavillers, II. 107.
 ———the severity of one on the fire-works on the Thames, II. 85.
 ———the character and marks of an ill one by Mr. Congreve, II. 124.
 ———false, I, 49. 65.
 Criticism on song writing, I. 65. On several plays of Dryden's, and Lee's, II. 108.
 Cromwell, Oliver, what Monfieur Paschall says of his death, II. 207.
 Cunning oppos'd to wisdom, II. 268.
 Cupid, with eyes, II. 166.
 Customs, barbarous in England, an account of them, I. 261.
 Cyrus, his heroick chastity, I. 265.
 Cyr. Saint, account of that monastery founded by Madam Maintenon, I. 203.

D.

- Dædalus, his letter about flying, II. 115.
 Damo, a daughter of Pythagoras, to whom he left his writings, II. 323.
 Daigné, Messrs. father and grandfather of Madam Maintenon, their story, I. 190.
 David (King,) a rabinical story concerning him, II. 216.
 ———the beauty of his lamentation for Jonathan, I. 218.

Davis,

I N D E X.

- Davis*, Sir George, his adventure with a lion, II. 243.
Dead men, only have honours in China, II. 60.
Death, a means to make the thoughts thereof the sweetest enjoyment, I. 74.
——— the hope of good men in it, II. 340.
——— what only can speak life in the midst of it, II. 206.
——— compared to Proteus, II. 207. Whence the abhorrence of it proceeds, II. 340. An infirmity not to desire it, I. 84.
Dedications, the abuse of them, I. 13. &c.
——— of an author to himself, I. 17.
Defamation, the art of it discovered, II. 347.
Definition of words necessary, I. 343.
Denham, Sir John, his directions for translating, II. 318.
Derham, Mr. his book of Physico-Theology commended, II. 365.
Des Cartes, discovered the pineal gland in the brain, I. 140.
Detraction, too easily given into by the ladies, II. 13.
Devotion, early hours of, the advantages of it, I. 282.
Dewlap, Dick, well made for a jester, I. 174.
Diaper, James, his letter recommending Tom's coffee-house for politeness of conversation, II. 40.
Diogenes, a severe saying of his to one that slandered him, II. 204.
——— his opinion concerning the poor and rich, II. 52.
Distress, imaginary, the greatest part of man's affliction, II. 310.
——— a scene of it in the Tragedy of Anne Bullen, I. 78.
Ditton and Whiston, their letter concerning the longitude, II. 99.
Donne, Dr. a criticism on his songs, I. 67.
Don Sebastian, by Dryden, wherein that Tragedy is faulty, II. 108.
Dream of a window in Aurelia's breast, II. 95.
——— concerning death, II. 207.
——— of the future punishment of the idle, II. 414 to 418.
——— concerning reproof and reproach, I. 239.
Dress, the greatest motive to love, I. 349.
——— not to be too much valued or despised, I. 40.
Dress,

I N D E X.

Dress, genius discovered therein, II. 252. Compared to poetry, II. 254.

Druids, held the doctrine of transmigration of souls, I. 75. Verses from Lucan, on that subject, ibid.

Drunkennes, a deforming foolish intemperance, I. 241.

Dryden, John, moral verses from his translation of Juvenal, I. 233.

——a saying of his recommending chastity in men, I. 189.

——faulty in his sentiments, II. 108.

Duels, proceed from false honour, II. 195.

——the danger of dying in one represented, I. 84.

——ought to be abolished, II. 170.

Dump, Goody, her letter complaining of a fallen husband, II. 192.

Dunkirk, animadversions concerning demolishing it, II. 172 and 189.

Durfey, Thomas, the lyric poet, his merit, and odes, I. 289—290. compared with Pindar, ibid. The world ungrateful to him, I. 118. His play of the plotting sisters commended, I. 353.

Dutch, their advantages over the French, I. 220, &c.

——not subject to the spleen, II. 187.

E.

E Ar-ring, Nicholas, Esq; his letter concerning a scolding wife, II. 191.

Earth, its inhabitants ranged under two general heads, II. 178.

Ease, loved by all men, I. 91.

——in writing, what it is, I. 52—61.

——an instance of it in love verses, I. 62.

Eclogue, meaning of that word, I. 113.

Education various errors therein, II. 49 to 53.

Eliza, the character of a good mother, II. 258.

Enemies, love of them not constitutional, I. 81.

English, famous for oddities, II. 237.

Epic poem, rules concerning it, I. 50.

——receipt to make one, I. 336.

Epicletus, his saying concerning censure, II. 205.

Epigram, a French one, miscalled a song, I. 67.

Epilogue to Cato by Dr. Garth, I. 135.

Equality in the happiness and misery of men, I. 230, 231.

Eve,

I N D E X.

Eve, her treating of an Angel described by Milton, II. 214.
 ——— her innocence to be imitated not her nakedness,
 II. 76.

Evites, women so called, and why, II. 231.

Evergreen, Anthony, his collection of fig-leaves for the ladies, ibid.

Eusden, Reverend Mr. translations of his from Claudian, II. 167—319.

Examination, self, advantages attending it, II. 297.

Examiner (Author of) reproved for insolence, ill-manners, and scandal, I. 169.

—— misapplies the word church, and abuses the clergy, lords and commons, I. 344.

—— his insolence to a bishop of the church of England, II. 34.

—— writes in defence of popery, ibid. His knack at finding out treason in words, II. 302. Has no talent for panegyric, II. 347. Letters concerning him, I. 227, and 271. An advocate for a lady who was said not to be lain with, I. 271.

Example, the influence thereof, I. 19.

F.

Fable of Pilpay on the usage of animals, I. 266.

Fame, common, house of, described, I. 285.

Family, head of, dangerous when bad, II. 321.

—— mistress of, a good one described, from the Book of Proverbs, II. 324.

Fantastical pleasures what they are, I. 205.

Fear of God, all true fortitude founded on it, II. 131.

Feet, pretty ones, a letter concerning them, II. 194.

Figleaf, (Leonilla) her letter concerning modesty-pieces, II. 133.

Fine gentleman, what qualifications form one in the eye of ladies, I. 137.

—— character of a compleat one, I. 138.

Fire-works on the Thames, description of them, II. 85.

—— a fine one described by Strada, ibid.

Flattery, grateful to human nature, II. 203. A satire against it, I. 44.

Flies and Free-thinkers compared, I. 300, 301.

Florella, angry about the tucker, II. 104.

Flying,

I N D E X.

Flying, a humour in the reign of Charles the Second, II. 115.

Footman, too fat for his master, I. 233.

Forefight, Frank, his good conduct on his marriage, II. 246.

Fornication, a criticism thereon, I. 68.

Fortitude founded on the fear of God, II. 131.

————at war with beauty, II. 268.

Foundling hospitals, wherein useful, II. 92.

Fontainbleau (Palace of) described, II. 78.

France, the fountain of dress, II. 253. Temperance of the climate, II. 90.

————court of, II. 79. A tour thither, 89.

Free-thinkers, unthinking wretches, I. 270. Enemies to truth, II. 8.

————the name degenerated from the original meaning, I. 159.

————considerations offered to them on the being of a God, II. 28. Contribute to idolatry, II. 30. Their absurdities and hateful characters, II. 341. No friends to liberty, II. 8. Condemned for affecting singularity, II. 32. Accuse the Christian religion as defective in friendship, II. 185. Like the Jewish Sadduces, considered as Automata, II. 184.

Free thinking, discourse on, censured, I. 9.

French, very courteous and talkative, II. 80. The happiest people in the world, II. 90. Their kindness and affability to strangers, II. 79.

————trade prejudicial to England, II. 343.

————nobleman, memoirs of one, II. 260.

————King, Lewis XIV. his conversation with Colbert concerning the great power of the Dutch, I. 220.

Friendship promoted by the Christian religion, II. 165.

Front box, how the ladies are marshalled there, I. 116.

Future state, proofs of it from the creation, I. 108.

————a rational and sublime idea of it, II. 31.

G.

Gale, John, many prints of him, I. 2.

Gallantry, precautions against it, II. 151.

————low, between a footman and a maid-servant, II. 23.

Gamesters,

I N D E X.

- Gamesters, a panegyric on them, II. 361.
- Gaming, ill consequences of that vice among the ladies, II. 140, 141.
- Gardens, the best not so fine as nature, II. 355.
- Genius, necessary to dress well, II. 25.
- Gentleman, wherein really superior to a mechanic, II. 182.
- qualifications requisite to form that exalted character, I. 138.
- Gentleman-like, gentlemanly, much of a gentleman, ill applied, I. 154.
- Gluttony, barbarous and destructive, I. 262.
- Gnatho*, a mad Doctor, wonderful cures performed by him, I. 45.
- Gold-finch, a beau, his behaviour to his offspring proposed for imitation, II. 160.
- Good breeding, the necessity of it, II. 49, to 53.
- Good Friday*, reflections preparatory to the observation of that day, I. 83.
- Goodnature and charity, recommended, I. 339.
- Gospels, the excellency of them, I. 85, 86.
- Grave-digger in Hamlet, humour of that character, II. 237.
- Greek*, two forts, I. 336.
- Greens, a curious collection to be sold, II. 359.
- Griffins, a treatise on the existence of them, I. 259.
- Guardian, the qualification for one, integrity more necessary than great understanding, I. 2.

H.

- H Amlet, prologue therein as spoken by Mr. William Peer, I. 351.
- Happiness, various notions of it, and wherein it consists, I. 124, 125, &c.
- with respect to marriage, ibid.
- Hawthorn, Nic.* his whimsical letter concerning public spirit, I. 249.
- Hearty*, Sir William, why he was not a fine gentleman, I. 137.
- Henry VII.* criticism on the stile of Lord Verulam's history of that King, I. 101.

Henry

I N D E X.

- Henry IV. of France*, a prayer made by him before a battle
I. 79.
- Hermaphroditical habit, described, II. 255.
- Hilaria*, her madness and cure, I. 47.
- History, rules for writing it, I. 101.
- of a Greek poet, II. 225.
- Holiness, the beauty of it, I. 87.
- Holt*, Lord Chief Justice, his integrity, II. 55.
- Honour, what, II. 306, 307.
- wherein commendable and when to be exploded, ibid, &c.
- described, II. 307.
- Temple of, can be entered only through that of virtue, II. 308.
- Honours, the duty and interest of all nations to bestow them on merit, II. 43, 44.
- Horse, described by Homer, Virgil, Oppian, Lucan, and Pope, II. 19, &c.
- Job's description of one better than Homer's or Virgil's, II. 20, 21.
- care of them recommended, I. 25. 263.
- Hospitals, a visit to them, I. 340. For foundlings recommended, II. 92.
- Howd'yecall*, Susan, her petition, I. 277.
- Humanity to be extended to the meanest creature, I. 263.
- Humour, the English distinguished by it, II. 235, &c.
- English, accounted for by Sir William Temple,
II. 237.
- Hunting, a poem in praise of it, II. 161. A remain of Gothic barbarity, I. 262. A barbarous custom therein, ibid.
- Hypocrisy, rebuked by our Saviour, II. 45.

I.

- I Am that I am, reflections on that name, I. 318, &c.
- Janglings, matrimonial, I. 315, 316.
- Idle men, monsters in the creation, II. 287.
- Idleness, a great vice, II. 184, 185.
- a means to conquer it, II. 188.
- Idolatry, a sottish sort of worship, II. 29.
- Jealousy, its fatal effects, I. 151, 152.

I N D E X.

Jesus Christ, his conversation with two disciples after his crucifixion, I. 86.

Ignorance and vice taints the blood, II. 211.

Jiltirts, the occasion of our ill breed of men, I. 106.

Immortality of the soul, arguments in proof of it, II. 30, 31, and 43, 44.

Ingratitude of men to beasts, I. 266.

Integrity in the power of every man, I. 2.

Intrigue, between a wild young gentleman and a jilt, I. 58.

———a footman and a maid servant, II. 23.

———in low life, II. 24.

Job, Book of, fine poetical paintings therein, particularly of a horse, II. 20.

Johnson the player, a good actor, I. 354.

Jonathan, David's lamentation for him, I. 226.

Joseph, his chastity, I. 188.

Irish stuffs, fine and delightful furniture, I. 208.

Ironside, Nestor, Esq; account of his birth and education, I. 5. How related to the Bickerstaffs, II. 50. A piece of true tempered steel, II. 83. Engaged in search of the Philosopher's stone, II. 324. His intended charities when he discovered it, ibid.

———Mrs. Martha, her character and love of ancestry, II. 212.

Italian comedians, drove from Paris for offending Madam Maintenon, I. 203.

Judges, the advantage of continuing them during good behaviour, II. 55.

Justice, the greatest of all virtues, II. 54.

K.

K Ingland hospitallers, objects of charity, I. 72.

Kneeling adorations, by an Authoress to a young nobleman, I. 15.

Knowledge, pursuit thereof recommended to youth, II. 111. Advantages attending it, 112.

L. Ladies,

I N D E X.

L.

- Ladies, all women such, I. 104. Conveniences of their gaming, II. 362.
- Lady's woman, must have the qualifications of a critic in poetry, II. 257.
- Lais*, history abuses her, II. 13.
- Lamentation for Jonathan (David's) its beauties, I. 226.
- Land interest, and trade support each other, I. 326.
- Largeness of mind, reflections on that disposition, I. 301.
- Last day, extracts from a poem of that name by Dr. Young, I. 215. 217.
- Laudanum, why out of doors at Bath, II. 363.
- Laughs, several characters of them, I. 116.
- Laughter the index of the mind, I. 115.
- the chorus of conversation, I. 120.
- Law-suits, methods of deciding them in India, II. 195.
- Learning, the natural source of wealth and honour, II. 113. Proper for women, II. 277.
- Leo* II. his letter to the Guardian, II. 154.
- Leo* X. Pope, his entertainment of the poets, II. 125.
- Letter from Alexander to Aristotle, II. 112.
- Bareface* (Will) to Nestor Ironside, I. 154.
- Nestor Ironside* to Pope Clement the VIIIth, II. 252.
- Nestor Ironside* to Sir Harry Lizard, I. 294.
- Sir Thomas Smith to Sir Francis Walsingham, I. 28.
- Tom Swagger* to Old Testy, II. 239.
- Letters, difficulties which attend the first invention of them, II. 352. Their great use, ibid.
- Lewis* XIV. renowned for inviolably keeping treaties, II. 171.
- Libertine, Athenian, his moral soliloquy, I. 348. Prayer of an English Libertine, I. 349.
- Liberty of the people, generosity of that principle, I. 6.
- asserted by Mr. Steele, I. 227.
- free-thinkers, enemies thereto, II. 6.
- Life, its several stages have several pleasures, I. 267, 268.
- Lilly*, Charles, his petition, I. 275.
- Lingerers, account of them, II. 184.
- Lion to be set up at Button's coffee-house, II. 53.—121.—154. Scandalous reports of him, II. 200. History of his species, II. 218. Calculation of his nativity, II. 220. Lion,

I N D E X.

- Lion, Sir George Davis's lion, II. 243.
 ——— Walsingham's Master-spy, some account of him, I. 305.
Lions, spies so called, infesting London, described, I. 304.
Liquors, no bribery in them, II. 305.
Little men, a club of them, II. 36, 37, &c.
Lizard, Sir Ambrose, chuses Mr. Ironside Guardian to his family, I. 7.
 ——— Sir Harry, his character, I. 23.
 ——— Lady, her character and manner of employing her time, I. 8. 18. 27.
 ——— characters of Miss Jane, Miss Annabella, Miss Betty, Miss Cornelia, and Miss Mary, I. 20, 21.
 ——— characters, of Mr. Thomas, Mr. William, and Mr. John, I. 52, to 56.
 ——— Tom, the clown, II. 437.
Loan-bank, a project, II. 97.
Lock-Hospital, patients there, great objects of charity, I. 72.
 ——— oblation of a chamber-maid thereto, I. 105.
Longbottom (John) the barber, his petition, I. 275.
Longinus, his best rule for the sublime, II. 266.
Longitude, proposals concerning the discovery of it, II. 101.
Love, personated by ambition and avarice, II. 269.
 ——— of enemies not constitutional, I. 81.
 ——— in low life, II. 24.
Lowngers, a sect of philosophers at Cambridge, II. 155.
Lucan's Strada, commended, II. 125.
 ——— translation of his verses on the transmigration of souls, I. 75.
Lucas, Dr. his practical christianity recommended, I. 273.
Lucifer, his description of a masquerade at the French ambassadors, II. 273 to 276.
Lucretius, Strada's, II. 126, 138.
Luke (Saint) contents of the 24th chapter of his Gospel, I. 86.
Lust, opposed to modesty, II. 268.
Lycurgus, the character of a good master, II. 26.
 ——— the Spartan, his good laws concerning matrimony, II. 76.
Lyrics, the English very fine, II. 156.
M. Machines,

[I N D E X.

M.

Machines, modern Free-thinkers are such, II. 183.
 Mad Doctor, account of one, and his medicines,
 I. 45.

Maid's Tragedy, Mr. Waller's saying of it, I. 149.

Maintenon, Madam, her birth, education, fortune and character, I. 190, 191, &c. Married to Scarron, I.
 196. Her power over and marriage to Lewis XIV.
 I. 200, 201.

Mankind, ranged under the active and speculative, II.
 178.

Mantua-makers, should be expert anatomists, II. 257.

Marlborough, Duke of, insulted by the Examiner, I. 345.

Marriage, what often occasions unhappiness therein, II.
 119.

———extravagant expences after entering into it censured, II. 245.

———the arts of parents in it, I. 243. 312.

———Janglings, I. 315.

Martial, his verses on a country seat, II. 355.

Masquerades, account of them, II. 229, &c. 273.

Master, how he should behave towards his servants, II. 26.

———the efficacy of his example, II. 321, 322.

Mechanics, of general importance, I. 5.

———in what really inferior to gentlemen, II. 181, 182.

Medals (modern) an error in distributing them, II. 44.

———proposal for making them more general and useful,
 by Dr. Swift, II. 45.

———struck in France on abolishing duels, II. 176.

Meekness, something sublime and heroick in it, I. 82.

Melancholy (pills to purge) a collection of songs so called,
 I. 291.

Melissa and Polydore, their story, II. 16.

Memoirs of the discovery of a French nobleman's children,
 II. 260.

Memorial from Dunkirk answered, II. 172.

Merchants, of great benefit to the public, II. 341.

Metamorphoses of men into lower ranks of being, I. 240.

Milton's description of Eve's treating the angel, II. 214.

Milleners, general remarks on them, ibid.

Mind

I N D E X.

- Mind (human) restless after happiness, II. 5.
 ——— strength of its true happiness, I. 126.
 ——— principal of attraction therein, II. 163.
 Misers, observations on them, I. 334.
 ——— act on the same principle as critics, ibid.
 ——— not happy in their riches, II. 8.
Misochiropsephus, Jobannes, his humorous letter, complaining of Button orators, II. 9.
 Mistress of a family, a good one described from the book of Proverbs, II. 335.
 Moderate man, an ode by Mr. D'Urfey commended, I. 289.
 Modesty bestows greater beauties than the bloom of youth, II. 77.
 ——— opposed to lust, II. 268. Lost among the ordinary part of the world, II. 25.
 ——— pieces laid aside, II. 134. A modesty-piece lost at the masquerade, II. 241.
 Molehill, a lively image of the earth, II. 271.
Moliere, his observation of making a dinner, I. 335.
Molly, the Barber's daughter, her history, II. 298.
 Moralists, quaint, a saying of theirs, II. 207.
More, Sir Thomas, his poem on the choice of a wife, II. 316.
 Morning prayer, recommended, I. 280.
 Mortality, bill of, out of the country, II. 209.
Moschus, remarks on his Greek pastorals, I. 112.
 Mother, character of a good one, II. 258.
Motteux, Peter, an unicorn's head to be erected there, II. 122.
Mountespan, Madam, recommended Madam Maintenon to Lewis the XIVth, I. 197.
Mum, Ned, his letter concerning the silent club, II. 143.
Myia, daughter of Pythagoras, account of her and her works, II. 323.

N.

- Natural history, a diverting and improving study, II. 304.
 ——— pleasures, what they are, I. 205.
 Nature, the contemplation of it exalts the spirits, II. 338.

I N D E X.

- Nature, imitated by art, II. 84.
 Necks of women immodestly exposed, II. 74. 105. 134.
 146.
Netherlands, their advantages over the French, I. 223.
Nomenclators, who, II. 98.
Norwood, John, peruke maker, his petition, I. 275.
Nottingham, Earl of, and his daughter defended against the insults of the Examiner, I. 169.

O.

- Oddities, the English famous for them, II. 235.
Oedipus, faults in that tragedy, II. 108.
Oger, Sir William, his manner of courtship, I. 22.
 Old people remember past times best, I. 26.
 ——— men of Gray's Inn, an account of them, I. 182.
 Operators, Cephalic, their petition, I. 276.
Oppian, his description of a war horse, II. 22.
 Oratory, an odd kind of it condemned, II. 9.
Otello, beauties and defects in that tragedy, I. 149.
Ovid, quotation from him about humanity to animals,
 I. 264.
 ——— Strada's, II. 147.

P.

- Painting in poetry, what it is, II. 18.
 Palaces of the French King, described, II. 78.
Pandemonium of Milton proposed to be represented in fireworks, II. 85.
Pandolph, Sir Harry, his manner of courtship, I. 22.
 ——— his manner of story-telling, I. 176.
 Parents love to their children considered, II. 258, 259.
 ——— generally err in marrying their children, I. 243.
 ——— too artful and mercenary in the disposal of their children, I. 245.
Paschall, Mr. his observations on Cromwell's death, II.
 207.
 Passions, disasters attending irregular passions, I. 31.
 Pastoral poetry, I. 161.
 ——— at first period of the world, its felicity, I. 89.
 ——— qualities thereof, I. 92.
 ——— criticisms thereon, I. 112, &c.
 ——— rules for writing it, I. 120, &c.

Pastoral

I N D E X.

- Pastoral poetry, explained by an allegory, I. 128.
 ——— English, characterised, I. 120, 121.
 ——— French, wherein faulty, I. 114.
 ——— of Sannazarius condemned, ibid.
Patch, Parson, why so called, II. 127.
 Patience opposed to scorn, II. 268.
 Peace proclaimed and prayers on that occasion, I. 345,
 &c.
 Pedants, their veneration for Greek and Latin condemned,
 II. 34.
 Pedigrees, the vanity of them ridiculed, II. 211.
Peer, Mr. William, his character and excellencies, I. 351.
 ——— broke his heart for growing fat, I. 353.
 Peripateticks of Gray's Inn, I. 182.
Persian Sultan, an instance of the justice of one, II. 56.
 Peruke a kind of index of the mind, II. 255.
 Petticoat, great, the grievance thereof, II. 123.
 Phænomena of nature imitated by art, II. 84.
Pharisees, for what blamed by Christ, II. 45.
Pbiutus and his cockle-shells affronted, II. 41.
Pkillips, Ambrose, his excellence in pastoral poetry, I. 123.
 132.
Philogram, his letter on speech and letters, II. 351.
 Philosopher, self taught, Arabian notion of such a one,
 I. 264.
 Philosopher's stone, Mr. Ironside's search after it, II. 324.
 Physicians never take physic. II. 364.
 Physico-theology, by Dr. Derham, recommended, II.
 365.
Picts, women untuckered, advised to imitate them, II.
 221.
Pidgeon, Bat, the hair-cutter, recommended, I. 4. 180.
 ——— his petition, I. 275.
Pilpay, his fable on the cruel usage of animals, I. 266.
Pindar, compared with Tom D'Urfey, I. 289.
 Pineal gland in the brain discovered by Des Cartes, I. 140.
 ——— voyage through several, I. 141.
 Pismires, nations of them described, II. 271.
Plain, Tom, his letter complaining of great hoop petticoats, II. 123.
Plato, his opinion of a future state, I. 109.
 ——— his answer to a scandalous report of him, II. 16.
Plato,

INDEX.

- Plato*, what he said of censure, II. 204.
- Players robbed in their journey to Oxford, II. 38.
- Pleasure, not to be exclaimed against in the reclaiming of youth, II. 166.
- men of, wherein miserable, I. 142.
- variety of, prepared for the different stages of Life, I. 268.
- fantastical, I. 205.
- natural, what, ibid.
- sensual, the lowest, I. 268.
- Plotting Sisters*, that play honoured by the presence of Charles the Second, I. 353.
- Plutarch*, examples of his good-nature, I. 263.
- Poetry, compared with dress, II. 253.
- different styles required for the different kinds of it, II. 254.
- sacred, I. 215.
- Poet, history of an ancient Greek poet, II. 225.
- tragic errors committed by them, II. 108.
- Polydore* and Melissa, their story, II. 16.
- Poor, mostly provided for by the middle kind of people, I. 358.
- Pope*, Mr. his description of a war-horse, II. 22.
- his prologue to Cato, I. 134.
- his pastorals compared with those of Phillips, I. 164, &c.
- Popes, the Leos the best, and Innocents the worst, II. 122.
- Poppy*, Ned, the story-teller described, I. 175.
- Possession, true, consists in enjoyment, I. 207.
- Posterity, the regard we should have thereto, II. 214.
- Posture-master, his frolics about clothes, II. 81.
- Pounce*, Hugh, the iron poet, his petition, I. 278.
- Practical christianity by Dr. Lucas, a specimen of that work, I. 273.
- Praise, grateful to human nature, II. 203.
- Prayer of a gentleman of fashion, I. 365.
- made by Henry IV. of France before a battle, I. 79.
- Common, of the Church of England, its excellency, I. 280.
- Prejudice allegorically described, I. 157.
- Pretty gentleman described, I. 153.
- Pride, that vice exposed, II. 270. Opposed to honour, II. 268. Priest,

I N D E X.

Priest, the respect due to that title, II. 180.
Prim, Ruth, her advice to Nestor Ironside, II. 193.
Prior, Matthew, some pretty verses of his, I. 233.
 ———his character of perfect beauty, II. 15.
Prolusions of Strada on the stile of poets, II. 125.

137 to 139. 147 to 150.

Property-man at the playhouse, his office, I. 368.
 ———robbed, II. 54.
Proteus compared to death, II. 207.
 Proverbs concerning a good mistress of a family, II. 335.
 ———when the use of them is insupportable, I. 98.
 Providence, a remarkable instance of its interposition, II. 132.

Prudes, how they should paint themselves, II. 221.
 Psalm 137 translated by Sir Philip Sidney, I. 76.
 Public spirit in Cato, I. 132.
 ———humorous mistakes concerning, it. I. 247.
 Punning, an apology for it, I. 143.
Purville, Mr. the property-man, account of his being robbed, II. 54.
Puzzle, Peter, his dream, II. 95.
Pythagoras, his learning and that of his family, II. 322.
 ———his invention the foundation of British commerce, II. 178.

Q.

Queries concerning matrimony, I. 246.

R.

Race-horses, cruel to put them to their utmost speed for diversion only, I. 25.
 Rakes, characterised, II. 185.
 ———in love, not so bad as gallant men, I. 69.
Raleigh, Sir Walter, his saying of Walsingham, I. 306.
Raphael, the beauties of his picture of our Saviour appearing to his disciples, I. 80.
 Reading, how abused, I. 256.
 Recipe for making an epic poem, I. 336.
 Recluse, idleness exposed, II. 185.
 Reformation of manners, a project for that purpose, II. 97.
 Religion, enquiries into it urged, I. 322.
 Renown, women of, instances of them, I. 46.

I N D E X.

- Repartee, a quick one in parliament, II. 211.
 Reproof, distinguished from reproach, I. 239.
 Revenge, the wickedness of it, I. 82.
 ——— a remarkable instance of it, I. 31.
 Rich men, what Diogenes, said of them, II. 36.
 Riding-dress, why called Pindarick, II. 255.
Ringwood, Esau, his memorial in behalf of hunters, I. 276.
 ——— Jack, his Temple education described, II. 263.
 ——— his milleners and shoemakers bills, II. 265.
 Roarings of Button's lion, II. 143.
Rocheſter, Bishop of, his definition of wit, II. 224.
Roscommon, Earl of, his rule for translating, II. 318.
Rowley, Mr. his propoſal for new globes, I. 4.
 Rural life, what deſtroyed the tranquillity of it amongſt
 the firſt race of men, I. 89, 90.
Ruſtyſides, his letter on maſquerades, II. 229.

S.

- S Ackville, Sir Edward, his anſwer to Lord Bruce's challenge, II. 176.
 ——— account of his combat with Lord Bruce, II. 195.
 Sacred poetry, pleaſant and beneficial, I. 215.
 Sadducees may be called Free-thinkers among the Jews,
 II. 46.
Sannazarius, his pastorals condemned, I. 114.
Santon, Barſiſa, his hiſtory from the Turkiſh Tales, II. 248.
 Scandal, a vice the fair ſex too eaſily give into, II. 13.
 ——— a tax paid by the meritorious, ibid.
Scaron, account of his marriage with Madam Maintenon,
 I. 194.
Schacabac the Perſian, an inſtance of his complaiſance, II.
 315.
 Schools the pleaſure of them, I. 267.
 Scorn oppoſed to patience, II. 268.
 Scriptures, the belief of them conſidered, I. 322.
Segonia, John De, account of his combat with his brother,
 II. 88.
 Servants, the duty of maſters towards them, II. 26.
 Sexes, the comparative perfections of them, II. 267.
 ——— at war, reconciled by virtue and love, II. 269.
 Shame, fear of it overcomes tenderneſs, II. 93.
 ——— public, the uſe it, II. 42.

I N D E X.

- Shepherd, true character of one in pastorals, I. 92, 93.
 Short club, account of it, II. 36 to 43.
 Sickness, the effects it has on the mind, II. 190.
Sidney, Sir Philip, a psalm translated by him, I. 76.
Silvio, his bill of costs in courting Zelinda, II. 49.
 Similies, difficult to succeed in them, I. 278.
 Sleep, shews the divinity of the human soul, II. 44.
 Sloth more invincible than vice, II. 185.
 Smallcoal-man, his musical talent, II. 236.
Smooth, Arthur, his letter about his wife who is seldom very angry, I. 316.
 Sneezing, a treatise thereon, I. 259.
 Snow, artificial, before the French King, II. 84.
 Snuff, philosophical, the use of it, I. 140.
Socrates contemned censure, II. 204.
 ——— his remarks on philosophy, I. 301.
Softly, Simon, ill used by a widow, II. 47.
 Soldiers, Christian vigilance recommended to them, I. 74.
 ——— moved at the distress in a tragedy, I. 78.
 Soliloquy of an Athenian libertine, I. 364.
Solomon, his choice of wisdom, II. 113.
Somersetshire, pastoral ballad, I. 167.
 Song, by a lady who loved an ugly man, I. 64.
 ——— writing, a criticism thereon, I. 65.
Sophia refuses a present of jewels on her marriage, II. 247.
 Soul, discovery of the seat of it by Des Cartes, I. 140.
 ——— Sympathy of, II. 260.
South, Dr. extract from his discourse on a good conscience,
 II. 205.
Sparkler, her letter about the character of Lucia and Mar- cia in Cato, I. 178.
 Speculative part of mankind compared with the active,
 II. 178.
 Speech, a discourse thereon, II. 351.
 Spies, the use secretary Walsingham made of them, I. 305.
 Spleen, the Dutch not subject to it, II. 187.
 Spring, the beauties of that season described, II. 158, 159.
 ——— verses thereon, II. 161.
 ——— called the youth and health of the year, II. 160.
 Squires, country, ignorant of nature, II. 339.
 Stage, an instance of its force in reforming the world, I. 179.
Statius, Strada's, II. 148.

I N D E X.

- Steele*, Mr. his letters against the Examiner, I. 227. 271.
 ——— his letters about Dunkirk, II. 338.
 Stomachers for beaus, II. 351.
 Story-tellers, censured for ridiculous punctuality, I. 175.
 Story-telling, not an art but a knack, I. 174.
 ——— rules for it, I. 98. 174, 175.
Strada, his excellent prolusions, II. 125. 136, 145.
 Sublime, Longinus his best rule for it, II. 266.
 ——— Boileau's notes on it, II. 130.
 Sullen husbands complained of, II. 192.
Swagger, Tom, his letter to Old Testy, II. 239.
 ——— affronted, II. 349.
 Swords, the immoderate length of them condemned, II.
 232. 239. 240.
 Sympathy of souls, II. 260.

T.

- T Ale-tellers hired to lull people asleep in Ireland,
 I. 176.
 Tall club, an account of it, II. 102.
 Temple education, account of it, II. 263.
Temple, Sir William, his account of English humour, II. 23.
 ——— his remarks on the gardens of Alcinous, II. 357.
 ——— his character of the Dutch, II. 187.
Texaminta angry about the tucker, II. 104.
 ——— like a wag-tail, II. 160.
Terræ-filius at Oxford, reflections on him, I. 308.
 Terrible club, account of it, II. 233.
Terror, Andrew, the Mohock, a cure wrought on him,
 I. 47.
Theano, the wife of Pythagoras, taught philosophy, II. 322.
 Theatres recommended as useful towards the improvement of the world, I. 179.
Theodosius, the Emperor, married to Athenais, a Grecian virgin, II. 279.
Theocritus's Idyls, compared with Virgil's Eclogues, I. 113.
Thrift, Generosity, his letter about French trade, II. 341.
Tillotson, extract from his discourse concerning the danger of all known sin, I. 85.
 Time, not to be squandered, II. 293, 294.
Timogenes, a man of false honour, II. 307.
Timoleon the Corinthian, his piety and remarkable preservation, II. 131.

Tiptoe,

I N D E X.

- Tiptoe, Tom*, a gallant member of the short club, II. 40.
 ————account of his assignation, ibid.
Topknot, Dr. why so called, II. 127.
Tory, English, his letters about demolishing Dunkirk, II.
 171. 189.
Trade, its interest the same with that of land, I. 326.
 ————with France prejudicial to England, II. 342, &c.
Tragedy writers, wherein notoriously defective, II. 108.
Translation, Lord Roscommon's rules for it, II. 318.
 ————the best means of refining and polishing a language,
ibid.
Tremble, Tom, the Quaker, his letter on naked breasts,
 II. 128.
Truelove, Tom, the character of a good husband, II. 120.
Tucker, remarks on the ladies laying it aside, I. 74. 104.
 133. 145. 201. 222. 241.
Tuck, Tim, the hero of the short club, II. 41.
Tugghe, Sieur, of Dunkirk, his impudence, II. 171.
Turks, their humanity to animals, I. 264.
Tutors, ill used and ill paid, II. 34.

V.

- Vanity of mankind to make themselves known, I.
 1 and 2.
Variety, the nature and sweets of it, II. 213.
Versailles, described, II. 78.
Verses describing the gardens of Alcinous, II. 360.
 ————from Anacreon, II. 336.
 ————to Mrs. Annabella Lizard, I. 61.
 ————out of Claudian, II. 319.
 ————from Congreve, II. 15. 124.
 ————from Juvenal and Ovid translated by Dryden, I.
 233. 264.
 ————from Eusden's translation of the Rape of Proserpine,
 II. 319.
 ————Eve treating an angel described from Milton, II.
 214.
 ————on gardening, II. 357, 358.
 ————from the French, I. 67.
 ————on the uncertainty of happiness, by Shakespear,
 I. 232.
 ————by Dryden and Prior, I. 233.

Verses

I N D E X.

- Verses by Prior, Congreve and Addison, II. 17, 18.
 ———descriptions of a horse, II. 21, 22, 23, 24.
 ———from a manuscript on hunting, II. 163.
 ———from Juvenal, I. 233.
 ———from Young's poem on the last day, I. 215. 217.
 ———from Martial, II. 357.
 ———month of May, II. 158.
 ———from Ovid, translated by Dryden, I. 264.
 ———from an essay on the different styles of poetry, I.
 141.
 ———from Racine's Atbaliah, II. 132.
 ———from Lord Rocheſter, I. 212.
 ———describing the spring, II. 163.
 ———from Statius, II. 42.
 ———concerning tranſlation, by Lord Roscommon, II. 320.
 ———on the tranſmigration of ſouls, I. 75.
 ———the court of Venus from Claudian, II. 169.
 ———from Virgil, translated by Dryden, II. 218.
 ———on wit and wiſdom, II. 227.
 ———on the art of writing, by a lady, II. 350.
Verulam, Lord, his writings a glory to the Engliſh nation,
 I. 101.
 ———criticiſm on the ſtile of his hiſtory of Henry the Seventh, I. 101, 102.
Vice taints the blood, II. 213.
 ———obſervations on the great vices, I. 77.
 ———of people of quality, not to be taxed, I. 105.
Virgil, his eclogues compared with Theocritus's Idyls, I.
 113.
 ———remarks on his praiſe of Auguſtus, II. 217.
 ———Strada's, commended, II. 127. 149.
Virtue, its intereſts ſupplanted by common cuſtom, I.
 243.
 ———Chriſtian, recommended, I. 83. 235 and 340.
 ———miſrepreſented by Free-thinkers, ibid.
Viſion of Xenophon, II. 116.
Ulyſſes, Coſmopolita, his letter on the Pineal gland in the brain, I. 140.
Umbra, her letter on public ſhame, II. 60.
United provinces, advantages they enjoy over the French,
 I. 220, &c.

I N D E X.

Universities, the foundation of them owing to religion,
I. 269.

———designed to teach refined luxury and enjoyments,
ibid.

———education, its errors, II. 52.

Voluptuary, the misery of one described, I. 142.

W.

WAg-tails, their way of courting, II. 160.

Walsingham, Sir Francis, his lions, who, I. 305.

———his letter concerning Queen Elizabeth's marriage with the French King's brother, I. 28.

Wanderer in reading, I. 256.

Ward, Mr. John, of Chester, his vanity, I. 2.

Wealth, insolent with respect to women, I. 186.

Weather, fine, the pleasure it occasions, II. 160.

Wedding clothes, the vanity of them exposed, II. 120.

Wenefrede, Saint, a doubtful person, II. 36.

Whiston, Mr. his letter on the longitude, II. 101.

White, Thomas, his letter to Nestor Ironside concerning the Philosopher's stone, II. 329.

Whoring, precautions against it, I. 68.

———instance of a gentleman reclaimed from it, I. 70, 71.

Wife, Sir Thomas Moore's direction for the choice of one,
II. 318.

Wilkins, Bishop, his art of flying, II. 117.

William the Third (King) his saying of Lewis the Fourteenth and Madam Maintenon, I. 203.

Wisdom opposed to cunning, II. 270.

———Solomon's choice of it, II. 115.

Wise men, to think with them but talk with the vulgar,
I. 96.

Wiseacre, Squire, the cause of his ruin, II. 247.

Wit, defined by the Bishop of Rocheſter, II. 226.

Women, the villany of deluding them exposed, I. 69.

———should have learning, II. 279.

———vanity of the compliments paid them by fops, I.
104.

———their vices not to be taxed, I. 105.

———wisdom and knowledge recommended to their study, II. 279. 300. 323.

———none in the world, I. 104.

Women,

I N D E X.

Women, generally married too young, I, 27.
Worship, public, indecencies committed at it, I. 281.
Wounds, most dangerous on a full stomach, II. 199.
Writing, verses on that art, by a young lady, II. 350.

X.

X Enophon, account of the vision of Hercules, II. 114.

Y.

Y Orkshire gentleman, his diet at Paris, I. 137.

Z.

Z Eal, the use politicians make of it, I. 359.
Zelinda, her generosity to Sylvio, II. 65.

F I N I S.

J.

Guardian

